The Phoenix Bikes facility.

Begin by Building a Bike

Finish by building a future.

By Michael McMorrow
The Connection

n Greek mythology, the phoenix was a bird that obtained new life by rising from its own ashes — symbolizing renewal in general. Arlington has its own version of the phoenix, one that provides opportunities for renewal and new life to many youths. No surprise that the organization is called Phoenix Bikes.

A young man was going astray step-bystep. School marks plummeted. Deadlines for being home were violated. Companions were unnamed and never seen. Asked about his activities brought the standard reply "nothing." Asked where "nothing" occurred the answer was "nowhere." The slow, downward slide of this troublemaker drew the attention of concerned adults. The result was all to the good: He joined Phoenix Bikes.

At this point special note must be taken that the youngsters at Phoenix Bikes are not juvenile delinquents or criminals. They are simply teenagers, usually "hanging out" and "at loose ends," who need a positive environment to learn right ways to become good students and good citizens. Building their own bike as part of a group contributes to that happening.

The young man mentioned above turned out fine. He accepted the challenge of building his bike. The teenager studied bike construction, selected parts, learned to use tools and, in time, rolled out a bike. Other developments were of far greater importance. The young man arrived on schedule, and often stayed later than required. He willingly offered help to others when they encountered a problem. With the time commitment expired, he could leave — but did not. Rather, he continued to attend and helped build other bikes knowing that they would be given to other young people in the community, or contributed to the physical education departments in Arlington's schools, or even sold to the public.

The story of this young man is fact, not fable, as recounted by Phoenix Bikes' Executive Director Henry T. Dunbar. It is a story of success, both for the youth and for the organization. This young person grew in many ways; for examples, acceptance of personal responsibility; time management; importance of study and education; patience; willingness to help others; finding satisfaction in a job well done; introduction to business operations; and more. The organization confirmed that the methods employed do work and that its mission of helping young people can be realized.

When asked about the greatest need, Dunbar said, "A bigger facility so more young people can participate in the program." About 60 youths are trained in me

Tide Turns for Mill Community center almost fell victim to recession; now ready to formally open.

By Michael Lee Pope
The Connection

our years ago, the fate of the Arlington Mill Community Center looked moribund. The global economy was crashing, and the developer working with the county to develop a community center and residential property was in serious trouble. Financing for the development was evaporating. And so was the dream of a new high-tech community center on Columbia Pike. So county leaders decided to move forward with the project anyway, removing the residential units and giving taxpayers the risk of developing the project without a private partner

"This is a neighborhood that hasn't really had a community center for some time now," said George May, chief of the facilities, design and construction bureau. "The old community center has been closed for some time in anticipation of this project, so now they have a much larger community center."

Now, four years after the original plan was spiked, a new $36 million Arlington Mill Community Center is ready for its moment in the sun. The center has already opened to the public informally, and next week county leaders will assemble at the five-story building to formally dedicate the latest addition to the county's public sphere. For county officials, it represents a long and winding road that began seven years ago and is finally coming to a much-anticipated conclusion.

"It's located next to two of our most favored trails in the county, the W&OD trail and the Four Mile Run trail," said Caroline

A public plaza is adjacent to the new community center, which is located at the intercession of Dinwiddie Street and Columbia Pike.

Temmermand, division chief of parks and natural resources. "So people have a lot of opportunities to get to it from the surrounding community without ever getting in the car."

THE STORY of the Arlington Mill Community Center begins in November 2006, when voters approved a $26 million bond referendum to redevelop the existing Arlington Mill Community Center — a 25,000-square-foot Safeway that had been converted to a community center where Four Mile Run intersects with the pike. County Board members approved a use permit in July 2008 for the development of a community center and public plaza with private apartments. The developer even secured tax credits from the Virginia Housing Development Authority.

Then the bottom fell out. The global financial crisis struck at the end of 2008, and financing for the project evaporated. The contract with Public Private Alliances was terminated in the fall of 2009.

pated in the Animal Welfare League of Arlington's 3rd annual fall fair on Sept. 7. During the free joyed live music, games, free giveaways and their event, guests met adoptable AWLA animals, enpets could receive microchipping for $30.

"Reaching the conclusion to not move forward with the approved plan for Arlington Mill project has been difficult and disappointing," according to a 2009 staff report. "Unfortunately, funding for market rate portions of the housing project is just not available in this market and it is unclear when it would become available again." The decision put county officials in a bind because they had already closed the existing community center in anticipation of opening a new one. Arlington leaders considered reopening the abandoned building, although that would have been difficult because it would have involved investing about half a million dollars in a building that would have been open for only a few months. They eventually came to the conclusion that the they couldn't justify the disruption to programs and services that would have to move into the building then move back out in short order.

"Although I would have rather not had so many delays, I do believe that we have ended up with a much-improved community center," said Linda Laduke, who lives near the community center. "It has retail space for coffee, a gymnasium and a plaza, which I see brimming with community activity."

IN JANUARY 2010, County Board members granted a contract to David Carter Scott for design services and approved a new county-funded project specialist at $125,000 a year. The old plan would have delivered a six-story building with 39,000 square feet of community uses, 3,000 square feet of retail and 33 residential units. The new plan had a five-story community center building with 64,537 square feet of community uses and 2,250 square feet of retail. It's a LEED certified building, although some have criticized the county for fudging the numbers.

"This project will add to the county's carbon footprint at the same time you are taking credit for reducing it," said critic Robert Atkins. "This is clearly a fraud perpetrated on the public."

OPINION

Will Margaret Febrey's visits continue in the new Overlee clubhouse?

Where Are You, Margaret?

Overlee Community waits, watches.

By Michael McMorrow The Connection

nother season of outdoor swimming has ended. For Overlee Community Association on Lee Highway in Arlington, something else has ended, or at least abated: Unease over the unanswered question "Will Margaret return?"

The original Overlee clubhouse dated to the 1890s. Built for Ernest Febrey's family, it later served as home for the Kincheloe clan, one member of which converted it into a sanitarium or nursing home. During the mid-1950s, with the property disused and decaying, Overlee bought it to build a swimming club.

The big house was home to Margaret Febrey, who died of tuberculosis at age 14 exactly a century ago. Her grave is in Oakwood Cemetery, Falls Church, a mile or so from today's pool. A family photograph of the Febreys includes one young girl dressed for the era before World War I, and consensus holds that the girl is Margaret. Her picture matches mers. The last sound it heard was a wrecking "sightings" of a ghostly figure that have been encountered many times.

Generations of young people have absorbed tales of spirits in and about the old farmhouse. As each new crop of high school-aged staff gathered to gossip, strange events were recounted and tales grew with repetition year-after-year. Bonding within the swim team frequently involved the passing on of "secrets." Coach Bob York always told of hearing music and sounds of groups conversing, only to have it end as he approached. Closet doors that opened and closed for no reason were reported, as were lights turning on or off. Lifeguard chairs sometimes began spinning on quiet, windless evenings. It came to pass that all mysterious happenings were attributed to Margaret's ghost.

Outsiders also have contributed to the legend. Last year, one of the wrecking crew reported seeing a teenage girl who disappeared before his eyes. He was so convincing that the crew forced delay of work for a day to be sure there was no girl on the premises.

For a century and one-quarter, the old house heard sounds of family and farm, moans of the sick and finally the excited cries of young swimball crushing its timbers and planks. Now the building is gone. A new clubhouse stands in > its stead. One uncertainty hangs over the property. Will Margaret return?

A single instance of skimpy evidence hints that she has done so already. According to Greg York, Bob's younger brother and current resident manager, Margaret may have visited during this summer. One young employee was assigned final rounds to lock up for the night. Turning a key and turning away, a voice said, "You can't lock me in." Unlocking the door and searching the entire room — no one was found. Greg York seems unusually calm in telling of that incident. One reason might be that he once saw the young spirit, believing at first it was his daughter until he realized she was transparent. He recognized Margaret in the Febrey family photograph.

With wreckers at the ready, a handful of delegates from Overlee paused at Margaret's grave. They left a note saying "Dear Margaret, we are building you a new house. Please come visit any time.'

Perhaps she will. Perhaps she has. Overlee waits.

County Needs Housing Authority

To the Editor:

The recent article on the fate of a housing authority in Arlington indicates that County Board members believe the county's policy requiring apartment developers to set aside a modest number of units more than meets the needs of the community and obviates the need for more aggressive action. Despite County Board Chairman Walter Tejada's professed commitment to support the construction of more affordable housing in Arlington, his refusal along with other board members — to support the establishment of a housing authority shows that his support is just smoke. The Washington Post reported that more than 3,600 people applied to rent the 122 new units built in connection with the Arlington Mill Community Center. Said Tejada: "The demand for rentals is amazing." No wonder it's amazing: the county has permitted developers to tear down older, affordable apartments and replace them with far more expensive new ones. Furthermore, the county's requirement that developers provide some small number of affordable units does nothing to chip away at the huge backlog of persons needing them. The only way Arlington will ever demonstrate its commitment to affordable housing is by supporting the establishment of a housing authority.

4th Annual Cosmo Couture on the Runway at Artisphere produced by the International Interior Design Association Mid-Atantic Chapter and taking place Thursday, Sept. 19 at Artisphere. Dresses made out of colorful tile, jackets made out of wood veneer, a gown made out of rubber materials – these are just examples of works of art that will hit the runway for a good cause.

Cosmo Couture 2013 fosters a direct collaboration between local architecture and interior design firms and their manufacturing partners in the Washington, D.C. area, to create garments reflecting a given theme. A panel of DC notables will judge the garments during a runway show with awards given to design teams in different egories. This year's judges include Michael McCarthy, editor of "DC Magazine;" Aba Kwawu, regional director for Fashion Group International of Greater Washington, D.C.; Suzanne Tick, creative director for Teknion Textiles and design director for Tandus Flooring; Maggy Francois, fashion design director of West Potomac Academy; and Philippa P.B. Hughes, chief creative contrarian, The Pink Line Project. Twenty-five design teams will participate in this year's event.

For the fourth consecutive year, the beneficiary for the event is My Sister's Place — DC's oldest domestic violence shelter providing comprehensive programs and services that holistically address doestic violence and challenges survivors face.

Each year WMCC selects a theme that focuses on a DC landmark. This year, WMCC has drawn inspiration from The National Zoo. Because birds are an integral part of virtually every ecosystem, it's not surprising that birds are all over the zoo, both as residents and visitors. So this year's design inspiration comes from exotic birds found at the National Zoo. Cosmo Couture's event partner, The Corcoran Gallery of Art, will assemble all of this year's garments into an exhibit to run Nov. 20-Dec. 7.

Cosmo Couture attracts more than 800 attendees and sells out each year. This year's exclusive benefactor for the event is Inscape, a leading manufacturer of workspace furniture and architectural products. Event tickets range from $80-180. Artisphere is located at 1101 Wilson Blvd. The event runs from 5-10 p.m. with a VIP reception 5-6 p.m., cocktails 6-7:30, runway show 7:30-9 and desserts 9-10 p.m. Visit www.cosmocouture.org.

Kids Fight Kids' Cancers

Emma Foy and Alex Strizek, both 10 years of age, came across a newspaper story describing a desperate need. They began making handicraft items. Edward Douglass White Council, Knights of Columbus, Arlington, holds a picnic to celebrate each national holiday over the summer. Emma and Alex set up a table and sold the craft items at each event. Over two summers and four picnics, all proceeds — $1,759 — have gone to Kids V Cancer, a 501(c)(3) nonprofit supporting research into pediatric cancers. See www.kidsvcancer.org.

chanics annually. After expressing deeply-felt gratitude to Arlington's Department of Parks and Recreation, he described the building it provides. "There are hundreds of uncovered bikes awaiting repair outside, and inside the work space is dark and cluttered with parts and tools, and the kids must work elbow-to-elbow," he said.

The work of Phoenix Bikes has found support in the community. For example, Madison Manor Bike Club is an informal group of neighborhood riders, according to member Frank "Pancho" Bate. The club recently held a fundraiser for Phoenix Bikes. Its members wanted to do something to help when they learned the objective of the organization.

"Phoenix Bikes lets kids do for themselves," Bate said, "and gives them the chance to be independent and responsible. Kids don't need to have everything done for them." He also said the fitness aspect of getting youths involved with biking was not overlooked.

Libby Garvey serves on the board of directors. She is a member of the County Board, but involvement with Phoenix Bikes is personal. She said her family, and especially her deceased husband, Kennan, have been avid bikers most of their lives. Phoenix Bikes was known to them for a long time. When widowed, a foundation in memory of her husband was established to support acquisition of a new facility in which to expand the organization.

Yorktown finished the 2010 season with a 9-2 record, losing to Washington-Lee in the first round of the playoffs.

Washington-Lee harrier Sarah Angell competes at the Monroe Parker Invitational on Sept. 7.

Rowdies Gain Tourney Win

he Rowdies arrived ready to play at the 2013 OBGC Capital Cub Tournament Saturday morning, Aug. 31, in Columbia, Md. at Howard Community College, stifling the Springfield Youth Club defensively and pressuring their opponents just enough offensively to walk away with a 1-to-0 win. With a victory under their belt and an immediate berth in the semifinals on Sunday, the Rowdies may have let down a little in their afternoon game that day, playing to a 1-to-1 tie against McLean MPS Extreme

In the Semifinals against Loudoun Red, the Rowdies jumped to a 2-to-0 lead in the first half with scores by Grace Hersey and Sarah Brooks. Tension mounted in the second half as Loudoun cut the Rowdies lead in half with a penalty kick score. A second score by Loudoun evened the game at 2 apiece before Grace Hersey broke through Loudoun's defense in the final minutes to put the Rowdies ahead for good. Final score: 3-to-2.

The OBGC final moved to Covenent Park, Ellicott City, pitting the Rowdies against the Montgomery Soccer Club Coyotes. Grace Hersey, with her speed, broke through and found the back of the net in the first half. It proved to be the lone score of the game. With a strong overall defensive effort and strong goalie play by Marisa Shotwell, the Rowdies secured their first tournament victory of the fall.

LANDSCAPING

Now This is What

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

Do nothing (no more treatment) and live life to the fullest (for as long as I'm able, and right now, I'm extremely able); start another chemotherapy protocol - with an I.V. chemotherapy drug which, according to my oncologist, has not been proven in any clinical setting to be better than the patient doing nothing; or, try to get into a Study (Phase 1, 2 or 3) at either N.I.H. (National Institutes of Health) or Johns Hopkins (in Baltimore) and let the treatment chips fall wherever experimental/ research medicine takes them. This is what my oncologist discussed with Team Lourie at my most recent appointment, my first appointment with him since my hospitalization and subsequent release.

It was my decision, of course. My oncologist, as he has opted to do so in the past when similar treatment options have been considered, tried to remain neutral, yet informative and responsive to our questions. He did offer up some personal opinions/assessments when we pressed him which turned out, oddly enough, to be contrary to mine. His feeling was, if he was the patient (and feeling as good I do), that he'd forgo any additional treatment - conventional or otherwise, and "take as many vacations as possible." As compelling as his extremely honest answer was, I/we decided not to give up quite yet and instead I authorized him to make inquiries about getting me into a Study at one of the preeminent research facilities in the world: National Institutes of Health, especially considering they're located approximately 30 minutes by car from my home.

In conjunction with this decision, I am also going to recommit myself to a more non-traditional, immune system-boosting/heal-thyself-type dietary pursuit that for the past four-and-a-half years has not – in total - been a part of my anti-cancer lifestyle: juicing organic fruits and vegetables, very specifically to include wheat grass and carrots; ingesting a drop or two of hemp oil per day and Berry Green (another super food/super healer: nutrient-rich and loaded with antioxidants); none of which is of course FDA-approved. Nevertheless, if my life is to go on (and I feel as if it should duh!), it feels like now is the time to ramp up, especially considering the admission by my oncologist that he as no more anti-cancer drugs that he feels offer any real hope in stabilizing/shrinking my tumors and/or reducing/preventing the inevitable fluid build-up common with my diagnosis. Unsettling, sort of, after 54 months, but after assimilating and digesting his news/medical opinions, I view this more as an opportunity. The doctors have done what they can do - responsibly, ethically; now it's time for me to do what I can do.

Certainly I'll have lots of questions - and anxiety – moving forward, but if I indeed want to move forward and live, repeating the past seems unlikely to be the answer (and quite frankly, after enduring multiple lines of chemotherapy already, the protocols actually don't allow it). I think I'm ready for the change, though (what choice do I have, really?); scared of course, but eager for the challenge. I've lived this long – post-diagnosis, against all odds (or so I was told originally); I'd like to think (hope certainly) that I can live a little bit longer.

Kenny Lourie is an Advertising Representative for The Potomac Almanac & The Connection Newspapers.

ABOUT ALEXANDRIA'S BRENDAN O'TOOLE

Brendan O'Toole served in the United States Marine Corps from 2008-2012. He enlisted during his senior year at T. C. Williams High School in Alexandria. During his time in the Corps, O'Toole completed two overseas deployments as a communications specialist based out of Marine Corps Air Station Cherry Point (N.C.).

On his first deployment (2009), Brendan served as a member of the 24th Marine Expeditionary Unit (MEU) which assisted in the Haitian earthquake relief effort, before serving in the Indian Ocean, the country of Djibouti, and patrolling the Gulf of Aden and the east coast of Africa where pirating was a major problem. During their Haitian duty, O'Toole established a functioning communication system that was used to coordinate the distribution of vital humanitarian supplies.

On his second deployment (2011), O'Toole was stationed in Afghanistan with Marine Air Support Squadron 1. Upon his arrival, he was assigned to Regimental Combat Team 6, which was assigned to the western part of the Helmand Province, outside the city of Delaram. O'Toole was responsible for all ground communications efforts of the Direct Air Support Center's area of operation. Sgt. O'Toole established and maintained radio and tactical communications systems used to coordinate air strikes against insurgent forces as well as support medical evacuations, and re-supply to U.S. military and coalition forces throughout the battlefield. It was during his Afghanistan deployment that Brendan started planning for The Run for Veterans.

In June 2012, Brendan completed his active duty military service with the rank of Sergeant. On his return home to Alexandria, he began planning and organizing The Run for Veterans, which was chartered by the State of Virginia in August, 2012.

NVAR Summit at GMU's Mason Inn

Complex shortage of homes for sale likely to persist.

By Tim Peterson The Connection

ationally syndicated columnist and moderator Kenneth R. Harney introduced the expert panel for the Northern Virginia Association of Realtors (NVAR) 17th annual Economic Summit Thursday morning, Sept. 5.

Dr. David Crowe, chief economist and senior vice president of the National Association of Home Builders, joined economic experts David E. Versel, a senior research associate at the George Mason University Center for Regional Analysis, and Dr. Lawrence Yun, senior economist for the National Association of Realtors. The panel addressed a full house - representing the nearly 10,000 realtor and "affiliate business members" that comprise the NVAR — on issues they believe best explain the current housing market and outlook, for both northern Virginia and the United States as a whole.

Though none could offer any "silver bullet" solutions to address all their concerns for housing, all agreed that growth in the market within a genuinely rebounding economy is sustainable, if only at a slower rate than the last year.

HARNEY, WHOSE COLUMN "The Nation's Housing" appears in The Washington Post and in syndication, opened the program on a positive note, praising the "fortunate" market of the last year. And the increased sales, listings and home prices, he said, are demonstrative of a second, more generally sustainable phase of economic rebound that should give buyers and sellers alike hope.

But Harney was also quick to follow with qualifications and caveats to the optimism. "It may vary where you are," he said, "but as far as I can tell, the entry-level buyer is they face hurdles. Student debt load is a big issue. And the job market is a huge constraint for the first-time buyer."

VERSEL WAS THE FIRST PANELIST to speak, giving more detail regarding past, present and future economic forces in the DC metropolitan area as they relate to housing. A major concern for Northern Virginia is the decline in federal jobs and federal procurement. His data show a continuation of the trends, with one example being a $14 billion decrease in spending from 2010 to

"There's no question the primary economic driver of this region has always been Uncle Sam," Versel said. "That said, we're not Detroit. We haven't been a one-horse town for the last 30 to 40 years. For example, Fairfax County has attracted Volkswagen North American Headquarters. We have that base of brainpower, and hopefully that's leading into a new generation of economic growth."

Versel sees a steady increase in building permits as a positive marker. Between 2012 still missing in action. They're out there, but and 2017, he forecasts 55,000 new jobs being created in the housing industry, which should come as a package with increased construction and greater inventory.

Lack of inventory, Versel explained, is a key impediment to the more rapid strengthening of the market. Families or individuals looking to trade up have fewer options to do so, and first-time or entrylevel buyers have fewer options to become involved at all. Versel attributes this mainly to the vast amount of homeowners in northern Virginia between the ages of 45 and 64.

"Nearly half of all homeowners in this region are in the Baby Boomer demographic," he said. "Let that wash over you for a second." Versel cited data from the 2010 Census.

"That's in no small part why inventory remains a problem," Versel continued. "They don't want to retire, they don't plan to retire. Some of it is financial and some of it is lifestyle: 'I'm not old, I'm never going to get old, and I'm living here forever.' They're probably going to stay in these places for another 20 to 30 years. For younger people who want to buy houses in those areas, unless you have new construction, there just isn't any inventory to purchase."

CROWE ECHOED HARNEY'S call out of the missing entry-level buyers, citing national survey data from University of Michigan studies, among others. "No matter what market you're in, the larger picture does matter. The government is going to react to what the rest of the economy's going to do."

Crowe said lifestyle choices — children of Baby Boomers moving in with their parents and deferring marriage, childbirth, etc. - and economic insecurity had and continue to have profound influence on household creation.

"We're in store for enormous pent up demand," said Crowe. "When people don't know what their future's going to be," they're less likely to move out of their parents' basements, get divorced, have more children, etc. "That's why we had such a surplus of houses. We didn't build too many houses — people stopped moving out. That's coming back again."

During the last housing peak, Crowe said household creation at the national level was 1.4 million annually. In the slump, that figure dipped to half a million. According to Crowe, it should be at about 1.2 million.

With the slow but now steady growth of the national housing market — contributing a three percent out of a more ideal six percent to GPD — Crowe is optimistic more and more of this pent of demand will emerge as entry-level sales. But there are still potential lags: availability of credit can be limiting and discouraging, the cost of building materials is increasing.

YUN ALSO STRESSED the importance of job creation in helping prop up the missing entry-level segment. He specifically referenced students who, whether they "overborrowed" or not, collectively feel the weight of loan debut. "What will most help them pay off debt or buy a home," he said, "is really jobs. If they have jobs, student

New plan in built-out 1940s colonial gains vital square footage as young family looks ahead.

By John Byrd

n the end, a skillful spatial reconfiguration is like a deft magician's trick — you've seen it with your own eyes, but you still can't figure out how they did it.

"Really, I don't know how this plan created so much more usable space," Alexandria resident Alice Goulet said, discussing a recent reconfiguration to several rooms in the family's 1,800-square-foot center-hall Colonial.

"All the changes stayed within the house itself, yet there's much more capacity and openness."

Sarah Wolf, the designer at Foster Remodeling Solutions hired by Alice and Paul Goulet to find an alternate floorplan solution, is pleased with the outcome, too, but she's seen this before. She said that owners often think the only way to gain useable square footage is to build an addition.

"The real challenge to converting less into more," Wolf said, "is knowing where existing space is being wasted."

But to start at the beginning: the Goulets purchased this brick-clad circa 1940s threebedroom house 10 years ago when Alice Goulet was expecting the couple's first child.

The master bath is articulated in Tuscan accents: natural clay tile combined with maple cabinet facings brushed in black stain; a tile wainscoting unifies the entire room including a spacious soaking tub.

As the family grew (there are now two girls and a boy — all under age 10), so, too, did the need to plan ahead. Starting in 2007, in fact, the Goulets hired Foster Remodeling on two occasions: first to finish the basement and enclose a porch; the second time to design an eat-in kitchen.

One fact emerging in the earlier remodelings, however, seemed daunting relative to the future. Under city code, the Goulets learned, the amount of new construction that could be added to the exterior had already been maxed-out.

"That meant we were looking for more usable space inside the existing structure," Wolf explains. "And this is the real frontier in older close-in homes; it's interior space planning that has really revolutionized the way traditional homes are now being used."

Itemized as a "wish list," the Goulet's goals seemed simple enough. Alice Goulet wanted a soaking tub, and an upstairs location for the washer/dryer. Paul Goulet envisioned a large walk-in shower. Both sought more closet space and "elbow room" in the master suite — plus, a larger bathroom for the kids, a new place for the linen closet...

AND, STILL, there was this lingering question of: what next? Where could more space be found if needed?

"Initially, I found it hard to see how we were going to gain any usable space," Alice Goulet said. "The master suite was pretty built-out."

Specifically, previous owners had constructed a rear elevation two-level wing with the master bedroom on top accessible through a small bedroom in the main house. The suite itself was configured as an L-shaped sleeping area wrapping a shelled-in enclosure that included a wardrobe closet, a linen closet and a master bath.

"The adjacent room in the main house had become a sort of foyer and dressing area for the master suite," Alice Goulet said. "Since the walk-in-closet was immediately inside the bedroom door, the entrance to the bedroom often got pretty cluttered."

All that changed when Wolf went to work. Exploring several budget variations, Wolf presented two plans: one that retained the existing space configuration as-is; a second option that "wipes the slate clean" — eliminating the "I" and reapportioning the suite into two parts: a rectangular sleeping area on the wing's eastern side; a walk-in closet and master bath positioned side-by side on the room's western wall.

"We saw immediately how well the second plan worked, " Alice Goulet said. "It makes the bedroom much more functional, and private."

While relocating a small linen closet was the only functional en suite deletion, Wolf's master bathroom layout finds the vital square footage needed for both a soaking tub and a walk-in shower.

The part of the floor previously occupied by the old bath now becomes a 36-square-foot walk-in closet complete with tray ceilings. The plan also reassigns the former suite foyer as the footprint for a new children's bathroom — which is now twice the size of its predecessor.

The real boon to Wolf's solution, though, is how well the new space works.

"The bedroom feels much larger," Alice Goulet said. "The narrow dressing zone has been eliminated. The whole room is open and airy."

Alice Goulet credits Wolf, too, with interior design that really differentiates the master suite's featured assets.

Choosing lighter reflective colors for wall surfaces, the new scheme draws out the brighter natural ambiance of a room that features east-facing French doors, a second window and a skylight.

A new teakwood custom-designed bed and headboard provides a suitably geometrical focal point to a room that is otherwise tranquilly elemental.

By contrast, the master bath is articulated in warm earthy Tuscan accents: natural clay tile combined with maple cabinet facings brushed in black stain; a tile wainscoting that unifies the entire room including a spacious soaking tub.

Alice Goulet said that most of the space planning and finishwork decisions were made at Foster Remodeling's showroom in Lorton.

"The showroom helped to made the process orderly," she said. "So many options inspire creativity."

Thinking ahead, the Goulets had the design team create stair access to a third floor attic, which they plan to eventually build-out as either their son's bedroom or a children's playroom.

"What we really appreciate about the incremental approach we've pursued with Foster is that it allows us to think everything through carefully," Alice Goulet said. "That really matters when you have a growing family."

loans are not a problem. It's about job creation. We are creating jobs, but at a slow pace. This is hindering young people in the country."

But like all the panelists, Yun's presentation was peppered with plusses and minuses. A positive for employment seekers, as well as their potential employers, is the concept of "clustering," according to Yun. Clustering takes place when a sizable number of skilled workers congregate in a certain area and that attracts employers, which attracts more skilled workers.

Yun applauded the multi-skilled workforce in and around DC as "a clustering effect beginning to grow." He believes more businesses will be drawn to the workforce, independent of government, which could in turn help create more jobs in the region.

Finally, noting the rising population of renters, Yun implored the audience (to pass along to their clients) to be wary of inflation over the next year. "We may actually get a 6 percent mortgage next rate next year, if inflation rate pops out. It's something to watch carefully."

Home LifeStyle Condo Renovations As sales of condominiums grow, so does demand for luxury renovations.

ore people are moving from leafy, sprawling suburbs to more urban areas, neighborhoods both in the city and in Northern Virginia that offer close proximity to restaurants, jobs, cultural activities and Metro.

Sales of condominiums in Northern Virginia are up, with growth in sales of condos outpacing both single-family homes and townhouses in the past year, according to the Northern Virginia Association of Realtors.

Both "echo boomers" (30-and-under) and retiring baby boomers want smaller homes near public transportation, shopping and workplaces, driving up the demand for condominiums, Lisa Sturtevant, deputy director of GMU's Center for Regional Analysis reported to NVAR in March.

With the growth in demand for condominiums comes growth in demand for condominium renovations.

One local company BOWA, a residential remodel and construction firm based in McLean, is responding to that trend by bringing on a new project leader, Mark

Miller, with expertise in condo remodeling and commercial construction. Miller and BOWA say they are responding to the demand to push the boundaries of luxury condo transformation.

Mark Miller

Most upscale condominium buyers will select a location where they want to live first, and then search for a condo to buy, said Miller, who is an Arlington resident, often in older buildings.

"Condos come in all different sizes and flavors," Miller said. "Years ago people didn't even think of renovating a condo."

People moving from larger suburban homes often are not satisfied with the smaller room sizes, utilitarian kitchens and cramped bathrooms that are typical of many condominiums.

"But now we can change the footprint from smaller rooms to open layouts," Miller said, creating room for luxurious kitchens open to spacious entertaining areas, luxurious bathrooms, audio/visual spaces and even outdoor spaces.

When renovating a condominium, Miller says they see some very demanding cooks. "They want high-end appliances. ... What clients want for their finishes is high end residential."

"Ten years ago, it was not even possible to produce that environment in a condo."

Some clients are renovating even in brand new buildings. "People will buy two units and combine them. Sometimes they are looking for different space than the [condo developers] are willing to do," Miller said.

RENOVATING CONDOMINIUMS is fundamentally different than renovating a single-family home, and it requires very different expertise, even if the desired outcome inside might look similar.

"It's a completely different animal," Miller said. The permitting and approval process is far more stringent, requiring commercial standards in many cases.

"The normal renovation process is completely different in a condominium building. The structural systems are different," Miller said. "The stakes are so much higher."

In a condominium renovation, you might have 10 very close neighbors who are concerned about noise. Just the installation of a dryer vent is likely to require a permit. Delivery of building materials and taking care of debris are more complex. Tapping into the heating and hot water systems in a condominium building requires different expertise than most single-family home builders have.

Miller recommends that anyone planning to buy a condo to renovate consult an experienced condo remodeler before they buy.

An experienced company can help guide the design with a realistic sense of what they actually can do and what sort of budget the project would require, can help with the permitting process.

"By understanding what's possible, we can come in very early, so if someone is contemplating a purchase, we can evaluate 'is this one remodeling friendly?' By getting on board early with a customer we can avoid some of the pitfalls," Miller said. "We can offer some design ideas for some things they haven't even thought of."

Renovating a condo is completely different, but it doesn't have to be bad, he said. You can create "brand new luxurious space out of something that wasn't that way before.'

This renovation features custom woodwork and built-ins to maximize space.
