County Executive Proposes $4.10 Billion Budget

Calls for no increase in real estate taxes; falls $61 million short of schools' request.

An exercise in “triage and trade-offs” was how Mount Vernon District Supervisor Daniel Storck described the FY 2018 budget as proposed by County Executive Ed Long to the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors on Tuesday, Feb. 14.

“There are really no surprises here, but it is still sobering” to see the results in black and white, added Supervisor Jeff McKay (Lee).

Long is proposing a General Fund budget of $4.10 billion.

The highlights of the 60-plus slide presentation include:

- ❖ $1.97 billion for Fairfax County Public School operations, as well as School capital construction projects with $13.1 million, and School debt service transfer of $189.13 million.

- ❖ Additionally, $83.4 million for school programs and services such as Head Start, Health and Behavioral Science Services and after-school programs.

- ❖ Funding for performance, merit and longevity increases for county employees.

- ❖ 18 relief Police Sergeant positions and $2.7 million for pay scale levelling for uniformed Police and Sheriffs.

- ❖ $3.10 million additional for Health and Human Services priorities, including for Community Services Board support for individuals with developmental disabilities to comply with current state and federal requirements and the addition of a human trafficking position.

- ❖ Funding for two new positions to support the start of the comprehensive review of the Zoning Ordinance.

- ❖ The county is able to manage the increases to Metro funding for FY 2018 – but the warning alarm has sounded. Starting in FY 2019 and beyond, the increases to the county’s required contribution to Metro “are not sustainable within existing revenue resources.”

- ❖ Reductions and savings included in the Advertised FY2018 Budget total over $13.0 million, generated through agency-identified opportunities, other post-employment benefits, fuel savings, and cost realignments.

The proposed budget is balanced at the current real estate tax level of $1.13 per $100 of assessed property value and the county retains its Triple-A Bond rating.

By creating a budget without increasing the current tax rate, a number of county priorities cannot be funded, according to Long.

The items that have been set aside in the multi-year budget include a Market Rate Adjustment of 1.65 percent for county employees, funding for the second year of the Diversion First program, police span of con-rol positions that were recommended by the Ad-Hoc Commission and a consultant study, public safety staffing plan, additional funding for employment and day support for individuals with developmental disabilities, information technology investments, and funding to replace fire and rescue apparatus. These items together carry costs upwards of $125 million.

The budget falls $61 million short of the amount requested by the School Board. To bridge that gap would mean a real estate tax increase of 2.5 cents, according to Long.

About 40 citizens rallied in the lobby of Government Center — until they were asked to vacate the premises and continue their demonstration and press conference outside the building. Led by Dave Broder, “Invest In Fairfax” made its appearance to “reject the FY 2018 budget proposal.” The group is a coalition of families, teachers, small business owners, county employees and firefighters, mental health workers and others. “It’s unacceptable that in the wealthiest county in the nation, the county executive would balance the budget by cutting mental health funding, cutting programs for people with disabilities and breaking promises to our frontline professionals.” Broder and his group are calling on the public to engage in the budget process and make their voices heard. “We need to remember that these services and our schools are largely what made Fairfax County great and they need to be protected.”

LONG ATTRIBUTES the majority of the county’s fiscal woes to sluggish economic growth. In the 10 years between FY1998 and FY2008 the county’s economy grew annually by about 6.5 percent. Since then, growth has slowed to 2.1 percent — less than a third of the growth posted in the prior decade.

“We have to also add in the effects of sequestration and the decrease in government contracts,” said Long.

The largest portion of the 1.1 percent increase in total employment over the prior year has been in the leisure, hospitality and retail sectors, lower paying categories. Job growth in the generally higher-paying sectors of information services and cybersecurity have lost ground. According to the county’s data, this slower economic growth and fewer higher-paying jobs have begun depleting the county’s coffers, while demand for services, as exemplified by the 2016 Fairfax County Human Services Needs Assessment, is on the rise.

Fairfax County’s high office vacancy rate is also having a negative impact on the budget. According to Long, of 116.4 million square feet of office space in the county, more than 20 million still sits empty. Even more worrying on this front, studies show that 73 percent of the the region’s office space is obsolete and just can’t meet the technology and work space demands of today’s business marketplace.

Long also produced statistics that show the local housing market still underperforming against the nation’s figures during 2016. With so much of the county’s revenues relying on real estate taxes, it doesn’t help matters when more than half of the 342,000 residences in the area saw no change or a decrease in their property’s assessed value.

Still unknown in the final budget evaluation is what effect the state’s yet-to-be-approved budget will have, as well as uncertainties surrounding the new federal administration.

The board’s next budget committee meeting is on Feb. 21.

SUPERVISOR Pat Herrity (Springfield) said in a statement: “It is again obvious by today’s proposed budget that we desperately need to do something about our unsustainable pension costs. ... I believe it’s time we refocus on our priorities like public safety, congestion relieving ... teachers’ salaries, and helping those most in need, and not balance the budget on the backs of either our taxpayers or our employees.

...The only way to fund our requirements is to set and fund priorities and reduce elsewhere.”

McKay and Supervisor John Cook (Braddock District) both expressed concern about figures showing that those least able to afford it seem to be facing the largest property assessment increases. McKay noted that in his district Habitat for Humanity housing ranked number three for the largest assessment increases in the area and questioned Long on “the math.” Long had no ready answer for this particular example, but promised that staff would look into the matter.

Cook questioned if the county executive had looked at inequalities and potential savings in programs like those that provide after-school care for all children at no cost, “even the children of millionaires who could afford to pay.” As for the lack of economic growth in the area, Cook said, “It’s been 12 years since we had more than 3 percent growth in the county. It’s time for the people across the river to stop this silly stuff and see to growth.”

Public hearings will be held at the Government Center on on April 4, 5 and 6. Those wishing to speak must sign up in advance.

The supervisors will be holding town hall meetings in their districts, and Long has committed to be in attendance to present the budget proposal directly to the public, and hear the public’s response and suggestions.

The Board of Supervisors’ meetings are recorded and available on the Fairfax County government website at www.fairfaxcounty.gov. Information about the meetings in each district is also available there, or call the local supervisor’s office directly for more information. The entire Advertised Budget Proposal presentation is also online. Citizens are also encouraged to participate in an online chat with Long on Feb. 24 from 3 - 4p.m. A link leading to a question submission for the chat can be found at the end of the “5 Things to Know About the FY 2018 Budget” on the county website.

Around 6:45 a.m. Wednesday, Feb. 8, Oscar Ramirez, Marvin Roach, Thermon Brewster and other men emerged from the hypothermia shelter at Rising Hope United Methodist Mission Church on Russell Road in the Mount Vernon Area of Alexandria. Many walked next door to 7-Eleven for cold beers, they said, to begin planning the day out, as is their routine.

When they began crossing the parking lot towards the Aldi grocery store, opposite Rising Hope, a flurry of at least half a dozen unmarked police cars descended on the group, Ramirez, Roach and Brewster said.

"Like it was a setup or something," said Brewster.

Officers with uniforms reading "POLICE" and "ICE" (U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement) immediately told the men to stop where they were. The officers didn't identify themselves other than that, the three men said, and weren't displaying weapons.

Roach and Brewster, both Caucasian, were shown pictures of men on a computer, they said, and asked by officers if they had seen any of them. Neither were asked for any kind of identification or nationality information.

Ramirez, however, was surrounded by officers, along with several other Latino men and told to stand against a wall while keeping their hands visible. Ramirez is a native of El Salvador but said he moved to the United States in 1986, when he was just a boy.

The Latino men were also asked if they had seen the men on the computer screen, said Ramirez, who attempted to help translate for some of the other men. But, after being singled out, they were also questioned about their immigration status.

Ramirez said he wasn't asked for photo identification, just his date of birth, Social Security number and date when he entered the country. He admitted he isn't a U.S. citizen, but holds a green card and was granted a suspension of deportation by U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services because he had been a resident for so long and has three daughters all born in America.

Officers told Ramirez he was OK, and was free to go. Other men, he said, were shackled and shoved into a large white van.

When the van pulled up, all three men said, there were already men inside, some of whom were crying. A number of men from the shelter were put in the van, which drove away.

Ramirez said he knows some of them have minor criminal records, and one was facing charges for a robbery in Washington, D.C. But he also said he had never seen an incident with law enforcement like this in his life.

Roach and Brewster, longtime residents of the area, echoed Ramirez. "I've been here all my life," Roach said, "I've never seen anything like this. It happened really fast, it was like a kidnapping."

SINCE THAT WEDNESDAY morning, the three said they've seen similar unmarked police cars in the area of the church off and on.

According to an ICE official, just two individuals were arrested Wednesday in that area, as part of routine activity.

"Every day, as part of routine targeted enforcement operations, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) arrests criminal aliens and other individuals who are in violation of our nation's immigration laws," the official said in a statement.

The official could not confirm other aspects of the men's story, and insisted ICE does not detain people in vans, as the men described.

"ICE conducts targeted immigration enforcement in compliance with federal law and agency policy," the statement continues, "ICE does not conduct sweeps or raids that target aliens indiscriminately."

Though the statement is at odds with the men's account, Ramirez said there is genuine fear in the Latino community. Businesses including the laundromat usually frequented by Latinos in that shopping center have been barren in the last week.

"People are staying in, they're scared," he said.

Across the country last week, ICE launched a number of "targeted enforcement actions," Department of Homeland Security Secretary John F. Kelly said in a statement on Feb. 13. That was following an executive order signed by President Donald Trump promoting stricter enforcement of immigration laws.

Officers in Los Angeles, Chicago, Atlanta, San Antonio and New York City areas arrested more than 680 people "who pose a threat to public safety, border security or the integrity of our nation's immigration system," Kelly said.

Kelly went on to explain this is nothing out of the ordinary for ICE. As well, he said, "President Trump has been clear in affirming the critical mission of DHS in protecting the nation and directed our department to focus on removing illegal aliens who have violated our immigration laws, with a specific focus on those who pose a threat to public safety, have been charged with criminal offenses, have committed immigration violations or have been deported and re-entered the country illegally."

Routine or not, the latest activities of ICE have clearly raised public sensitivity and fear of deportation.

At a Lee District town meeting on Feb. 11, state Sen. Scott Surovell (D-36) said there was like a whole segment of the audience missing due to perception of events like what allegedly took place on Russell Road as raids.

"We have to do more to make people feel welcome," Surovell said. "I'm going to do everything I can to support them."

A woman in the audience said students in her English for Speakers of Other Languages class are coming to school scared, some that parents may not be there to pick them up at the end of the day.

“There is genuine fear,” said state Sen. George Barker (D-39), “that little kids should not have. A political decision may sound great until you see the faces of the individuals affected.”

Supervisor Dan Storck (D-Mount Vernon) said since word of ICE activity in Mount Vernon started circulating last week, he’s received numerous concerned calls and emails about people being unreasonably disturbed.

“At the core of this, it’s about a diverse community wanting to make sure we honor and respect that by not going after people that may be different, look different from us.”

At the same time, Storck said, “we recognize, we don’t want people that are criminals to be out in our community. There’s a balance we always want. I don’t think our President has that balance in what he does.”

Storck said he’s been in touch with the Mount Vernon District police station about citizens’ concerns over ICE activity. He said he was told they “usually don’t know what’s going on,” with ICE or other federal law enforcement operations.

FCPD spokesperson Master Police Officer Don Gotthardt said in an email county police had no role in any “federal raids,” and, “in fact, have not been made aware of any in Fairfax County.”

TRAFFIC WAS SLOWED significantly Saturday afternoon Feb. 11 on I-66 around Centreville where a number of both FCPD and ICE vehicles had lights flashing and a large van with about a dozen Latino male passengers were pulled over.

In this case, Gotthardt said an FCPD officer made a routine stop for a traffic violation and then, after seeking advice from a patrol supervisor, contacted ICE to assist with interviews.

Gotthardt said he did not know the nature of the conversations, though both he and an ICE official confirmed that none of the men were arrested and were allowed to re-load the van and resume driving.

When asked to give further detail on the FCPD protocol for collaborating with ICE, Gotthardt did not respond in time for print.

Board of Supervisors Chairman Sharon Bulova said she hasn’t been made aware of any more activity by ICE than what other citizens are seeing themselves or on the news.

But, as she said she has asserted numerous times, Fairfax County is a “Very diverse community — people have come from all over the globe. It’s important that we maintain a harmonious community.”

Bulova also said she’s watching carefully “to make sure all members of our communities are being treated fairly.”

AFTER HAVING LISTENED to the story from Ramirez, Roach and Brewster, immigration lawyer Nicholas Marritz of the Legal Aid Justice Center in Falls Church doesn’t believe that was the case across from Rising Hope.

“Stopping a group of people without reasonable suspicion, seems to be on extremely questionable legal footing to me,” Marritz said. “You have the right not to be seized, based on the color of skin. It’s a violation of Constitutional rights.”

Marritz said the men’s narrative underscores the need for more people to understand and assert their rights.

“Everyone is protected by the Constitution,” he said. “You have the right to remain silent, to say ‘I’m not going to tell you about immigration status,’ to ask to talk to an attorney. No one should have to suffer an indignity like this.”

Storck said the stress and fear he’s heard from community members, especially among children, is “not what we want in Mount Vernon, in Fairfax County.”

“This is not the United States of America that I voted for, nor the kind of country in think the vast majority of people really want,” Storck continued. “We need solutions, not more fear. Solutions, by recognizing the millions of undocumented residents, and providing a path to be here legally, protecting their children in the meantime. Protecting our children, frankly.”

Storck said he planned to speak with senior FCPD leadership and find out more about their protocol for interacting with ICE.

The hypothermia shelter at Rising Hope is coordinated by New Hope Housing.

Fairfax County Names Police Auditor

Richard G. Schott, a 27-year veteran of the FBI, was appointed by the Board of Supervisors to be Fairfax County's first-ever independent police auditor.

The announcement of Schott's hiring came at the board's Feb. 14 meeting. As auditor, Schott will report directly to the board and have numerous oversight responsibilities. Among them, Fairfax County said:

- * Monitoring and reviewing internal investigations of Police Department officer-involved shootings, in-custody deaths and use-of-force cases in which an individual is killed or seriously injured.

- * Requesting further investigations if he determines that an internal investigation was deficient or conclusions were not supported by the evidence.

- * Issuing public reports for each reviewed internal investigation.

- * Reviewing all resident complaint investigations of alleged excessive or unnecessary force by officers.

- * Producing annual reports that analyze trends and recommend improvements.

Schott will start full-time, paid work April 17 this year — salary is set at $143,000 — joined by two assistants.

Creation of an independent auditor was a recommendation by the Ad Hoc Police Practices Review Commission for increased oversight of Fairfax County Police.

Another was creation of a civilian review panel. The supervisors approved that body as well, set to be a nine-member group of volunteers who will re-

During closed session Feb. 14, the board was scheduled to review applications and nominees for those positions. However no announcement was made following the closed-door meeting.

Board of Supervisors chairman Sharon Bulova said she was pleased to welcome Schott as the first auditor.

"In this newly established position, Mr. Schott will provide increased accountability and transparency to the Fairfax County Police Department," Bulova said in a statement.

According to Fairfax County, Schott's FBI career includes working as a special agent with local law enforcement and training state and local officers, "including legal issues associated with police officers' use of force and deadly force."

He also serves as an FBI Academy instructor at Quantico, the county said, teaching new agents about basic constitutional criminal procedure and legal consequences when they employ force.

Ending Gerrymandering Important to Region

Efforts appear dead for this session, but elections later this year provide new opportunities.

While three bills that could have reined in the runaway gerrymandering in Virginia made it through the Virginia Senate to crossover, they died on Tuesday morning in a House subcommittee, despite some vocal Republican support.

In Virginia, Democrats have won every statewide election since 2010, and notably Barack Obama won the state in 2008 by more than 52 percent of the vote. Many of these victories have been narrow. In 2009, Republicans won Governor, Lt. Governor and Attorney General by strong margins.

It is reasonable, given these results, to expect that representation at the state level would be approximately even, with either Republicans or Democrats holding a small advantage. Instead, Republicans control the House of Delegates 66 to 34, and the Virginia Senate 21 to 19.

There is little competition for these seats as a result.

According to OneVirginia2021, an advocacy group for ending gerrymandering, 56 candidates in the House of Delegates faced no real competition in the last general election in 2013, with 22 Democrats and 34 Republicans facing no major-party challenger. In the end, only two seats changed parties.

These same lawmakers are set to redraw the the boundaries for state legislative and congressional districts after the 2020 census, and the just-killed proposed constitutional amendments would have required that these not be motivated by partisan politics. By far the best approach would be to turn the process over to a non-partisan commission to draw boundaries in the best interests of Virginia citizens.

One of the proposals, cosponsored by Sen. Jill Vogel (R) and Sen. Janet Howell (D), passed the Senate 31-9, but died in the House subcommittee on a 5-2 vote.

It matters more here in Northern Virginia. Virginia is a Dillon Rule state, which means that localities have only the power specifically given to them by the General Assembly. It means that the economic engines of the state in Northern Virginia provide most of the financial wherewithal but citizens in Alexandria, Arlington and Fairfax County are often unable to govern themselves as they wish because of control by a far more conservative General Assembly.

Real change starts locally. Anyone seeking change should tune in for this year's elections in Virginia, including all the seats in the General Assembly, plus Governor, Lieutenant Governor and Attorney General. Every voter will choose one Virginia Senator and one member of the Virginia House of Delegates.

Nonpartisan redistricting could support the best interests of the population, not the politicians.

Unpacking the Truth from Rhetoric and Emotion

To the Editor:

The Feb. 2-8, 2017 Connection was packed with quotes and opinions by Congressman Connolly, Delegate Filler-Corn and Mary Kimm expressing outrage over the President's Executive Order "Protecting the Nation from Foreign Terrorist Entry into the United States," which temporarily suspended entry into the United States of people from 7 nations identified as "Countries or Areas of Concern." The Connection had pictures of congressional members and lawyers at Dulles Airport and numerous quotes from Congressman Connolly, such as "Donald Trump would paint over Emma Lazarus's words on the Statute of Liberty" and "We will fight this illegal Executive Order." In Delegate Filler-Corn's opinion piece, she states the Executive Order "... is in direct opposition of our American values and our Constitution because it essentially creates a religious test for entry into the United States." In her oped, Mary Kimm heartily celebrated "...peaceful demonstrations protesting the un-American assault on travel from particular Muslim majority countries."

So let's unpack the truth from the rhetoric and emotion to see if there is any overlap, starting with examining whose entry into the U.S. was suspended, why their entry was suspended and who developed the list of the countries on the suspended travel list. The Executive Order states "...to ensure the proper review and maximum utilization of available resources for the screening of foreign nationals, and to ensure that adequate standards are established to prevent infiltration by foreign terrorists or criminals, pursuant to section 212(f) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1182(f) [Classes of Aliens Ineligible for Visas or Admission/Association with terrorist Organizations], I hereby proclaim that the immigrant and nonimmigrant entry into the United States of aliens from countries referred to in section 217(a)(12) of the INA [Immigration and Nationality Act Of 1952], 8 U.S.C. 1187(a)(12), would be detrimental to the interests of the United States, and I hereby suspend entry into the United States, as immigrants and nonimmigrants, of such persons for 90 days from the date of this order..." Section 217(a)(12) of the INA, 8 U.S.C. 1187(a)(12) is the Visa Waiver Program Improvement and Terrorist Travel Prevention Act of 2015 passed under former President Obama and lists "Countries or Areas of Concern," which, since its passage, includes the seven countries of Iraq, Syria, Iran, Sudan, Yemen, Somalia and Libya — all added under former President Obama. The criterion for these countries/areas is: "(I) whether the presence of an alien in the country or area increases the likelihood that the alien is a credible threat to the national security of the United States; (II) whether a foreign terrorist organization has a significant presence in the country or area; and (III) whether the country or area is a safe haven for terrorists."

As you can see from the above listed criterion, "Religion" and "Muslim majority" are not criteria for the countries or areas of concern identified by the Obama Administration and specified in President Trump's Executive Order. So the first accusation, that Executive Order used a religious litmus test to select the countries for suspended entry, is false. In fact, former President Obama established a precedent for halting entry of refugees into the U.S. from a predominantly Muslim country when his "...State Department stopped processing Iraq refugees for six months in 2011," because of a credible threat to Americans as reported in a 20 November, 2013 ABC News exclusive report.

Let's unpack the question of whether or not the Executive Order is consistent with the Constitution. The Preamble to the Constitution states "WE THE PEOPLE of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America." There are two points of significance in the Preamble that pertain to the President's Executive Order. First, the Constitution applies to citizens of the United States, not to non-citizens as implied by Delegate Filler-Corn. Secondly, the Constitution was established to provide common "defence" (now spelled defense) and promote the general Welfare. Now let's examine the oath of office that every President must take in accordance with Article II, Section 1 of the Constitution as follows: "I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.” The Constitution is clear: The President is sworn to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution to include the common defense and general welfare of American citizens. President Trump issued his Executive Order to protect American citizens from people from other countries who were determined to pose security risks. The Order is consistent with the Constitution. Delegate Filler-Corn’s accusation that the Order is in opposition to the Constitution is false.

Next up, let’s examine whether or not the Order was legal. The Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 states “(e) Whenever the President finds that the entry of any aliens or of any class of aliens into the United States would be detrimental to the interests of the United States, he may by proclamation, and for such period as he shall deem necessary, suspend the entry of all aliens or any class of aliens as immigrants or nonimmigrants, or impose on the entry of aliens any restrictions he may deem to be appropriate.” The President has broad legal authority to suspend the entry of people from other countries into the United States. If the President does not have the Constitutional authority to suspend entry into the country, then how did the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 pass the Constitutionality litmus test before becoming law, why has the law not been overturned by the Supreme Court in the last 65 years? This is a slam dunk — Congressman Connolly’s claim is false.

In summary, there is little to no overlap between the truth and the rhetoric and emotion that filled the Feb. 2-8, 2017 Connection on the issue of the President’s Executive Order “Protecting the Nation from Foreign Terrorist Entry into the United States.” President Trump’s Executive Order was Constitutional, legally sound and it has precedence.

Beware, do your due diligence to avoid getting caught up in politically motivated whirlwinds based on fact-free hot air swirling madly around the beltway.

Alarming Tendencies

To the Editor:

Last week Congressman Gerry Connolly, my representative in the 11th district, sent the following tweet: “Maybe his enablers will rouse themselves when the Brownshirts come for them. I, for one, will resist.” Wow! Not sure what his intent was but to refer to evil people under Hitler to those of us who voted for President Trump is outrageous. Unfortunately, it appears that many Democrats these days are using connection to Hitler to make their attacks on people who support President Trump. Yet as we witness on TV, rioters, reportedly including professors, set fires at the University of California at Berkeley in opposition to a conservative speaker and Trump supporter who was scheduled to speak there. It seems to me that this should alarm both democrats and republicans as to how low people are sinking in our nation and especially how low the Democratic Party has sunk.

Voting Rights Under Attack

To the Editor:

Unsatisfied with the existing identification requirements to vote in Virginia, on Feb. 1 Republicans in Virginia’s House of Delegates voted to make it even harder to vote in state elections. If this were to pass, in order to register to vote in Virginia’s state elections, Virginians would need to prove citizenship by providing a birth certificate, a passport, or naturalization documents. This is part of the continued Trump-led Republican effort to attack the very soul of our democracy by raising concerns about non-existent voter fraud and then pretending to fight it.

These restrictions will not stop voter fraud because that fraud does not exist. What the restrictions will do is send Virginians rooting through boxes of decades-old files containing birth certificates and passports. Passports are expensive, and birth certificates are hard to obtain, especially if you were born somewhere outside the U.S. These restrictions will keep ordinary, every day Virginians from voting to choose their representatives.

Republicans are doing their best to keep Virginians from the polls, but they cannot keep us from the phones. Unless you are currently holding your birth certificate or passport in your hands, I recommend picking up your phone and calling your state senator before they try to take that away too.

Celebrating Black History Month

Educators say these lessons are urgently needed in current racial climate.

BY MARILYN CAMPBELL
THE CONNECTION

Even though Elavie Ndura knows that it is a daunting challenge to help children grasp the entirety of the African American experience in the shortest month of the year, each February she and other educators give it their best effort. This year, they feel it's more important than ever.

"With all of the racial experiences we're having these days, it's critical that children know their history and are not basing their knowledge on only what they see on television or what they hear from their friends," said Elavie Ndura, Ed.D., professor of education at George Mason University in Fairfax. "Research shows that children who understand their histories do better in school and in society, so it's critical that families teach their children about their history."

Ndura believes that the current racial climate in the U.S. gives this year's Black History Month additional significance. A study released last month by the Pew Research Center shows that among Americans, 61 percent of blacks, 58 percent of Hispanics and 45 percent of whites say that race relations in the United States are generally bad. Local educators say Black History Month offers opportunities to address issues of race by allowing the past to inform the present.

"We have seen for more than a year how people from different political viewpoints, but also races, sexes, cultures, religions, sexual orientations, and socioeconomic statuses related to each other in the present political climate, and it was troublesome," said Mika'il A. Petin, Ph.D., associate director of African and African American Studies at George Mason University. "Teaching the history of Black or African-heritage peoples in this month ... is necessary to starting difficult conversations about ... current race relations ... and social inequalities."

Race relations in our society have been deeply strained during the election and as America adjusts to a new presidential administration. These divisions make African American history lessons critical for all children, but particularly for black children, says Ndura. "As African American parents we have a serious duty to educate our own youth," she said. "Knowing your history grounds and anchors you firmly so that you are not wavered in the wrong direction because of whatever feelings might be caused by what you're seeing on the news."

Books that explore African American experiences are on display at libraries and bookstores during Black History Month.

Black history lessons work best when they're intentional and creative, advises Jessica Lewis, Ed.D., assistant professor of education and human services at Marymount University in Arlington. "Children benefit when they are exposed to a variety of perspectives, ideas and stories because it helps expand their view of the world and people living in it," she said. "The ability to understand and identify with others and their experiences is a powerful, life-long lesson."

Lewis advises making a trip to a local bookstore or library to find books that offer a glimpse of African American history and suggests that parents begin with books on subjects that interest their children. "[Parents] may start with readings on sports, or science, or biographies of the accomplishments and hardships of individuals who persisted throughout history to make a difference," she said. "Parents can ... select books by black authors and illustrators and then take the time to read the story together, discuss the pictures, and ask questions about what the characters are feeling and experiencing."

Other ideas include exploring music with roots in African American history such as ragtime, jazz, gospel and blues, making a timeline of major events that occurred during the Civil Rights Movement, and reading speeches from civil rights leaders and then helping children write their own speech about what they are inspired to change in the world. Such activities can open a natural discussion and need not be complicated to be effective, says Lewis.

"Parents are their children's first educators," said Lewis. "It is important for parents to help their children understand the experiences of other children who are not like them because it builds empathy and a deeper sense of community."

One roadblock to such honest conversations, cautions Petin, is a discomfort with discussions of racial differences.

"Let's be frank, some white Americans who are politically and socially conservative become noticeably uncomfortable with the topic of race, and therefore find difficulty with Black History Month," he said. "Yet, Black History Month — similar to the Black Lives Matter movement — does not express superiority over others. Both the month of celebration and sociopolitical movement are forms of resistance to deliberate attempts to conceal the worthiness of Black or African-heritage people in this country."

Some people "may attack Black History Month and Black Lives Matter as political correctness and identity politics, but I would argue that they are not seeing the humanity in both efforts," continued Petin. He emphasized the importance of taking a purposeful approach to teaching children about black history. "I think that all parents must intentionally search for, study, and celebrate those who are on the margins, living in the shadows, perceived as voiceless, and regarded as invisible. Too often, black Americans were those marginal, shadowed, voiceless, and invisible people. All parents should be honest about that, and should have confidence in the U.S. only being great when they and their children educate themselves on this country's history in more inclusive terms."

Schools often play a significant role in the month's activities. Students at the Bullis School in Potomac, Md., for example, attend a Black History Month assembly each February. This year's event was led by several students who shared their thoughts, essays and other projects on a variety of topics. "Diverse literature is always a great idea," added Allison Ewing, chair of the social studies department at Bullis.

"Twenty-eight days of teachable moments" is one way that Petin characterizes Black History Month. "It is never too early to start preparing your kids for a world that is increasingly more connected and shrinking," he said. "When all parents teach their children how to develop skill sets to understand, value, empathize, and celebrate those who may be different than them, the children are better prepared to function in the world."

Fairview Elementary School Student Artists Visit Richmond

On Sunday, Feb. 12, Del. Eileen Filler-Corn (D-41) hosted student artists and their families from Fairview Elementary School in Fairfax for a reception and capitol tour in Richmond. Fairview Elementary School Principal Lynn Mayer and Fairview Art Teachers Heather Devlin and Vered Grossman were also in attendance.

Since January, the works of these young artists have been displayed on the fourth floor of the General Assembly building, in the hallway leading to Filler-Corn's Richmond office. The student artists are a variety of ages and used a variety of mediums in their artwork. This is the second time that Filler-Corn has featured artwork from a local elementary school, having hosted White Oaks Elementary the previous year.

"Spending time with these creative young people and their proud parents was a highlight for me and truly made my day. Their energy and enthusiasm is contagious," said Filler-Corn.

Filler-Corn, who also serves as chair of the General Assembly Arts Caucus, was pleased that so many families made the trip down to Richmond. She posed for pictures with all the student artists as they pointed out their artwork to her and their very proud parents.

"You never know who might have walked by these paintings," Filler-Corn explained to the students. "Delegates, Senators, and Cabinet Secretaries...even the Governor, have all viewed your beautiful work. You should be so proud of yourselves."

Following the reception in the General Assembly Building, the entire group, including Del. Filler-Corn, walked over to the Capitol for an official tour, with a stop on the Floor of the chamber of the House of Delegates. The students listened intently to both the tour guide's explanation of the history of the building, and the Delegate's stories of a day in the life of a Member of the General Assembly. She reminded the children, that one day, they too could sit and vote in the House as she does today.

Filler-Corn hopes to continue the tradition with other local elementary schools in the 41st District. "There are nine elementary schools in my district. I look forward to continuing the tradition we started this session for years to come," Del. Filler-Corn said.

Local Dance Teacher to Receive National Honor

Buffa's Dance Studio's long-time dance teacher and choreographer, Tom Alexander, is the recipient of the Chicago National Association of Dance Masters' 2017 Artistic Achievement Award for his contributions as both an artist and educator in enhancing the lives of others. The Chicago National Association of Dance Masters is a non-profit organization that serves the continuing education and professional development needs of dance teachers and students throughout North America.

"To me, it's not just teaching dance steps," Alexander said. "It's about giving valuable life lessons to all of my students and paying it forward on what was given to me countless times."

For Alexander, dance has been in his blood since the beginning. At age 12 he began dancing with Master Teacher Ray Hollingsworth and has worked with stars such as the late Debbie Reynolds, June Allyson, Van Johnson, Dolly Parton, Marie Osmond and Bob Hope — just to name a few. His dance journey continued on the open water as a dancer, choreographer, and trainer on the Crystal Cruises Luxury Cruise Ship Productions, where he spearheaded many lavish productions. His career continued to flourish, entertaining theme park goers at Carowinds, Busch Gardens, and even Tokyo Disneyland.

In 1984, he arrived in Burke, where he began teaching at Buffa's Dance Studio. Throughout his years teaching he's touched the lives of countless dancers, many of whom have become dance teachers themselves and now get the opportunity to teach alongside him at Buffa's Dance Studio.

"I wouldn't be the person I am today without my dance family," said Karlyn Williams, a former student and now part-time dance teacher at Buffa's Dance Studio. "Tom taught me how to teach, but more importantly he taught me how to communicate my love and passion for dance with others."

In addition to teaching full time at Buffa's Dance Studio, Alexander teaches jazz and tap as well as judges and choreographs nationwide on several dance conventions circuits including Dance Makers Inc., Southern Association of Dance Masters, Spark Intensives, Dance Teachers United and Chicago National Association of Dance Masters.

"Tom has been an invaluable member of our dance community throughout the years," said Buffa Hargett, owner of Buffa's Dance Studio. "It's an honor to see the lives he's touched in our studio and throughout the country. I'm fortunate to not only call Tom a colleague but a friend after all these years."

Alexander will be honored at the Chicago National Association of Dance Masters 105th Annual Awards Banquet later this year to thank him for the contributions he has brought to the organization, in addition to sharing his talent, knowledge and passion for dance with so many teachers in the dance community and guiding students in a positive way.

Springfield's Eddie Garretson is on his way to Richmond Wednesday to receive an honor in Virginia's House of Delegates.

Del. Dave Albo (R-42) will commend Garretson in a House Resolution for his work with people with disabilities and their families through Eddie's Club.

"Eddie's a good guy," Ron Fields, of Fairfax, said. "He's put together a good club. Everyone has enjoyed everything he provides for them." Fields has two sons with high-functioning autism who are members of the club.

But after 20 years, Eddie's Club will end its run this spring, and the some 200 members and their families will no longer have the activities they have enjoyed through it. Fields is hopeful that someone will step up and take over running the club.

"It will be a big loss to all of the kids," Joel Ticatch, of Chantilly, said. His son Avi, 21, has been a member for six years.

Anita Liberatore, of Burke, said her son Dane, 14, loves the club and will miss it. Dane has made friends at the club, and it is a place for him to put the social skills he learns in school into practice.

Liberatore said the club contributed to the development of her son's social skills. She said Dane, who has intellectual disabilities, developmental issues, autism and cerebral palsy, has become comfortable introducing himself to and making friends with neurotypical children.

But it's not just people with special needs who have enjoyed the benefits of membership. Liberatore said that getting together with other parents and "talking to people you don't have to explain things to has been great."

The club's registration director Patti Alf,

Dane Liberatore, 14, of Burke, loves Eddie's Club and has made good friends in the years he has participated. His mother, Anita, said the club has been great in connecting with similar families.

From left, Joel, Avi, and Elaine Ticatch, of Chantilly, participate at an Eddie's Club bowling event at Bowl America in Burke on Sunday, Feb. 12. Avi, 21, who has autism, has been a member of Eddie's Club for six years.

who has a 30-year-old son in the club, said the opportunity to network with other families has been invaluable. She has people she can talk to about questions that range from what to do when a child turns 18 to recommendations for a good dentist.

Garretson started his work with children with disabilities in 1993. He was directing a West Springfield little league baseball team when he saw a different kind of team on the field — a challenger division comprising children with physical and intellectual disabilities.

"We're all here for a reason. I found my reason," Garretson said. He started the Springfield Challenger Baseball with nine children. Within five years, the team burgeoned to 188 players.

Garretson noticed that during the off-season, the players did not have any social activities. That is how Eddie's Club was formed in 1997.

Once a month the club meets at Washington Irving Middle School in Springfield. With a group of volunteers, it provides activities, such as arts and crafts, woodcrafting, indoor baseball, basketball, games and other programs. The club also schedules outings, such as going to movies, basketball games or bowling; has a teen and young adult club that meets for pizza in Annandale; and throws themed parties.

Alf said the activities try to meet members on the level in which they can participate. One activity the club had was wheelchair art, where big pieces of paper were laid out on the floor with paint, and parents and volunteers helped push members who used wheelchairs.

Garretson will still be involved with Springfield Challenger Baseball after Eddie's Club ends. He is proud of the work that volunteers have poured into the club. "There's no way we would be where we are, do the things we've done without the community and the volunteers," he said.

Garretson received the Herbert C. Hunter Citizen of the Year Award from the Greater Springfield Chamber of Commerce in 2012.

Senior Night for Lake Braddock Girls Basketball

Four girls honored at ceremony after playing together since freshman year.

Four senior girls from Lake Braddock Secondary School were honored during Senior Night at the girls varsity basketball game against West Springfield — their last regular season game — on Friday, Feb. 10, 2017 at the school. The girls have been playing together since they were freshmen.

Senior Night consisted of special treats throughout the day from the younger players. Some got treated to Starbucks drinks; they also displayed posters of their basketball accomplishments in the gym and decorated their lockers. A flyer commemorating the event was printed as well as T-shirts, spirit buttons and stickers. After the basketball game, there was a pizza party with cake and goodies.

“Tonight we’re here to celebrate the Lake Braddock varsity senior girls. We’re here to celebrate the time that they’ve spent on the team and here at the school, and all that they’ve given, as well as their leadership on the court,” said organizer Monica Park of Fairfax Station.

The highlight of the evening was when the announcer introduced each senior girl along with her family members as they walked under an arch of swords created by the Lake Braddock Color Guard before the basketball game began.

First to walk through the arch was Bailey Edwards (#10), who was escorted by her parents Billy and Elizabeth Edwards, brothers Billy Jr. and Kyle, as well as Grandma Sue Edwards. She said her favorite memory of basketball is getting to play with some of her best friends: Elisa, Kate, and Ari, over these past four years.

Next up was Kate Esper (#30), escorted by her parents Mark and Leah Esper and her grandmother Polly Esper. Her favorite memory is when friend Sydney hit the buzzer beater for a win against Annandale.

Next to walk through the arch was Ariana Zimmerman (#32), who was escorted by her parents Margie and Erik Zimmerman, sister Chelsea and brother-in-law Clayton Ferrer, and best friends Delaney Crowe and Elise Lausier. Her favorite memory is playing for Coach Art and running his trick plays.

Next up was Elisa Taylor (#43), escorted by her parents Kevin and Kathy Taylor, her grandparents Ken and Bev Willey, and best friend Nazaneen Saleh and a surprise guest, her sister Elaina who came from college. Her favorite memory is beating West Springfield after so many years.

According to parent Kevin Taylor of Springfield, “I could not be more proud of my daughter Elisa. She’s made quite a huge advance this year in her play and her competitiveness. It’s a great way for her to finish off her senior year; I could not be more proud.”

Coach Tim Lucas added: “They’ve been a great group; they’ve done everything I could ever ask for, and they’ve made this year a lot of fun.”
