County Executive Proposes $4.10 Billion Budget

Calls for no increase in real estate taxes; falls $61 million short of schools' request.

BY ANDREA WORKER
THE CONNECTION

An exercise in “triage and trade-offs” was how Mount Vernon District Supervisor Daniel Storck described the FY 2018 budget as proposed by County Executive Ed Long to the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors on Tuesday, Feb. 14.

“There are really no surprises here, but it is still sobering” to see the results in black and white, added Supervisor Jeff McKay (Lee).

Long is proposing a General Fund budget of $4.10 billion.

The highlights of the 60-plus slide presentation include:

- ❖ $1.97 billion for Fairfax County Public School operations, as well as School capital construction projects with $13.1 million, and School debt service transfer of $189.13 million.

- ❖ Additionally, $83.4 million for school programs and services such as Head Start, Health and Behavioral Science Services and after-school programs.

- ❖ Funding for performance, merit and longevity increases for county employees.

- ❖ 18 relief Police Sergeant positions and $2.7 million for pay scale levelling for uniformed Police and Sheriffs.

- ❖ $3.10 million additional for Health and Human Services priorities, including for Community Services Board support for individuals with developmental disabilities to comply with current state and federal requirements and the addition of a human trafficking position.

- ❖ Funding for two new positions to support the start of the comprehensive review of the Zoning Ordinance.

- ❖ The county is able to manage the increases to Metro funding for FY 2018 – but the warning alarm has sounded. Starting in FY 2019 and beyond, the increases to the county’s required contribution to Metro “are not sustainable within existing revenue resources.”

- ❖ Reductions and savings included in the Advertised FY2018 Budget total over $13.0 million, generated through agency-identified opportunities, other post-employment benefits, fuel savings, and cost realignments.

The proposed budget is balanced at the current real estate tax level of $1.13 per $100 of assessed property value and the county retains its Triple-A Bond rating.

By creating a budget without increasing the current tax rate, a number of county priorities cannot be funded, according to Long.

The items that have been set aside in the multi-year budget include a Market Rate Adjustment of 1.65 percent for county employees, funding for the second year of the Diversion First program, police span of con-

County Executive Ed Long said the proposed budget maintains commitment to the county’s financial policies addressing needs for both county and schools, but in the end “the county’s needs are much greater than our resources.”

rol positions that were recommended by the Ad-Hoc Commission and a consultant study, public safety staffing plan, additional funding for employment and day support for individuals with developmental disabilities, information technology investments, and funding to replace fire and rescue apparatus. These items together carry costs upwards of $125 million.

The budget falls $61 million short of the amount requested by the School Board. To bridge that gap would mean a real estate tax increase of 2.5 cents, according to Long.

About 40 citizens rallied in the lobby of Government Center — until they were asked to vacate the premises and continue their demonstration and press conference outside the building. Led by Dave Broder, “Invest In Fairfax” made its appearance to “reject the FY 2018 budget proposal.” The group is a coalition of families, teachers, small business owners, county employees and firefighters, mental health workers and others. “It’s unacceptable that in the wealthiest county in the nation, the county executive would balance the budget by cutting mental health funding, cutting programs for people with disabilities and breaking promises to our frontline professionals.” Broder and his group are calling on the public to engage in the budget process and make their voices heard. “We need to remember that these services and our schools are largely what made Fairfax County great and they need to be protected.”

LONG ATTRIBUTES the majority of the county’s fiscal woes to sluggish economic growth. In the 10 years between FY1998 and FY2008 the county’s economy grew annually by about 6.5 percent. Since then, growth has slowed to 2.1 percent — less than a third of the growth posted in the prior decade.

“We have to also add in the effects of sequestration and the decrease in government contracts,” said Long.

The largest portion of the 1.1 percent increase in total employment over the prior year has been in the the leisure, hospitality and retail sectors, lower paying categories. Job growth in the generally higher-paying sectors of information services and cybersecurity have lost ground. According to the county’s data, this slower economic growth and fewer higher-paying jobs have begun depleting the county’s coffers, while demand for services, as exemplified by the 2016 Fairfax County Human Services Needs Assessment, is on the rise.

Fairfax County’s high office vacancy rate is also having a negative impact on the budget. According to Long, of 116.4 million square feet of office space in the county, more than 20 million still sits empty. Even more worrying on this front, studies show that 73 percent of the the region’s office space is obsolete and just can’t meet the technology and work space demands of today’s business marketplace.

Long also produced statistics that show the local housing market still underperforming against the nation’s figures during 2016. With so much of the county’s revenues relying on real estate taxes, it doesn’t help matters when more than half of the 342,000 residences in the area saw no change or a decrease in their property’s assessed value.

Still unknown in the final budget evaluation is what effect the state’s yet-to-be-approved budget will have, as well as uncertainties surrounding the new federal administration.

The board’s next budget committee meeting is on Feb. 21.

SUPERVISOR Pat Herrity (Springfield) said in a statement: “It is again obvious by today’s proposed budget that we desperately need to do something about our unsustainable pension costs. ... I believe it’s time we refocus on our priorities like public safety, congestion relieving ... teachers’ salaries, and helping those most in need, and not balance the budget on the backs of either our taxpayers or our employees.

...The only way to fund our requirements is to set and fund priorities and reduce elsewhere.”

McKay and Supervisor John Cook (Braddock District) both expressed concern about figures showing that those least able to afford it seem to be facing the largest property assessment increases. McKay noted that in his district Habitat for Humanity housing ranked number three for the largest assessment increases in the area and questioned Long on “the math.” Long had no ready answer for this particular example, but promised that staff would look into the matter.

Cook questioned if the county executive had looked at inequalities and potential savings in programs like those that provide after-school care for all children at no cost, “even the children of millionaires who could afford to pay.” As for the lack of economic growth in the area, Cook said, “It’s been 12 years since we had more than 3 percent growth in the county. It’s time for the people across the river to stop this silly stuff and see to growth.”

Public hearings will be held at the Government Center on on April 4, 5 and 6. Those wishing to speak must sign up in advance.

The supervisors will be holding town hall meetings in their districts, and Long has committed to be in attendance to present the budget proposal directly to the public, and hear the public’s response and suggestions.

The Board of Supervisors’ meetings are recorded and available on the Fairfax County government website at www.fairfaxcounty.gov. Information about the meetings in each district is also available there, or call the local supervisor’s office directly for more information. The entire Advertised Budget Proposal presentation is also online. Citizens are also encouraged to participate in an online chat with Long on Feb. 24 from 3 - 4p.m. A link leading to a question submission for the chat can be found at the end of the “5 Things to Know About the FY 2018 Budget” on the county website.

Fear in Communities Following ICE Enforcement

Around 6:45 a.m. Wednesday, Feb. 8, Oscar Ramirez, Marvin Roach, Thermon Brewster and other men emerged from the hypothermia shelter at Rising Hope United Methodist Mission Church on Russell Road in the Mount Vernon Area of Alexandria. Many walked next door to 7-Eleven for cold beers, they said, to begin planning the day out, as is their routine.

When they began crossing the parking lot towards the Aldi grocery store, opposite Rising Hope, a flurry of at least half a dozen unmarked police cars descended on the group, Ramirez, Roach and Brewster said.

"Like it was a setup or something," said Brewster.

Officers with uniforms reading "POLICE" and "ICE" (U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement) immediately told the men to stop where they were. The officers didn't identify themselves other than that, the three men said, and weren't displaying weapons.

Roach and Brewster, both Caucasian, were shown pictures of men on a computer, they said, and asked by officers if they had seen any of them. Neither were asked for any kind of identification or nationality information.

Ramirez, however, was surrounded by officers, along with several other Latino men and told to stand against a wall while keeping their hands visible. Ramirez is a native of El Salvador but said he moved to the United States in 1986, when he was just a boy.

The Latino men were also asked if they had seen the men on the computer screen, said Ramirez, who attempted to help translate for some of the other men. But, after being singled out, they were also questioned about their immigration status.

Ramirez said he wasn't asked for photo identification, just his date of birth, Social Security number and date when he entered the country. He admitted he isn't a U.S. citizen, but holds a green card and was granted a suspension of deportation by U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services because he had been a resident for so long and has three daughters all born in America.

Officers told Ramirez he was OK, and was free to go. Other men, he said, were shackled and shoved into a large white van.

When the van pulled up, all three men said, there were already men inside, some of whom were crying. A number of men from the shelter were put in the van, which drove away.

Ramirez said he knows some of them have minor criminal records, and one was facing charges for a robbery in Washington, D.C. But he also said he had never seen an incident with law enforcement like this in his life.

Roach and Brewster, longtime residents of the area, echoed Ramirez. "I've been here all my life," Roach said, "I've never seen anything like this. It happened really fast, it was like a kidnapping."

SINCE THAT WEDNESDAY morning, the three said they've seen similar unmarked police cars in the area of the church off and on.

According to an ICE official, just two individuals were arrested Wednesday in that area, as part of routine activity.

"Every day, as part of routine targeted enforcement operations, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) arrests criminal aliens and other individuals who are in violation of our nation's immigration laws," the official said in a statement.

The official could not confirm other aspects of the men's story, and insisted ICE does not detain people in vans, as the men described.

"ICE conducts targeted immigration enforcement in compliance with federal law and agency policy," the statement continues, "ICE does not conduct sweeps or raids that target aliens indiscriminately."

Though the statement is at odds with the men's account, Ramirez said there is genuine fear in the Latino community. Businesses including the laundromat usually frequented by Latinos in that shopping center have been barren in the last week.

"People are staying in, they're scared," he said.

Across the country last week, ICE launched a number of "targeted enforcement actions," Department of Homeland Security Secretary John F. Kelly said in a statement on Feb. 13. That was following an executive order signed by President Donald Trump promoting stricter enforcement of immigration laws.

Officers in Los Angeles, Chicago, Atlanta, San Antonio and New York City areas arrested more than 680 people "who pose a threat to public safety, border security or the integrity of our nation's immigration system," Kelly said.

Kelly went on to explain this is nothing out of the ordinary for ICE. As well, he said, "President Trump has been clear in affirming the critical mission of DHS in protecting the nation and directed our department to focus on removing illegal aliens who have violated our immigration laws, with a specific focus on those who pose a threat to public safety, have been charged with criminal offenses, have committed immigration violations or have been deported and re-entered the country illegally."

Routine or not, the latest activities of ICE have clearly raised public sensitivity and fear of deportation.

At a Lee District town meeting on Feb. 11, state Sen. Scott Surovell (D-36) said there was like a whole segment of the audience missing due to perception of events like what allegedly took place on Russell Road as raids.

"We have to do more to make people feel welcome," Surovell said. "I'm going to do everything I can to support them."

A woman in the audience said students

Fire Mostly Extinguished at Lorton Waste Facility

Several “minor spot fires” remain smoldering at the Covanta Fairfax Waste to Energy Facility on Furnace Road in Lorton, after a two-alarm blaze began Thursday evening, Feb. 2. That’s according to a Frequently Asked Questions page posted Feb. 14 to the Fairfax County website about the facility.

Covanta spokesperson James Regan said one Fairfax County Fire engine has remained at the site to assist with the process of removing waste from the refuse pit and tipping floor, to ensure all the hot spots are doused.

“We are extremely grateful to Fairfax County and the Fire and Rescue Department for their tireless efforts and cooperation during this emergency,” said Joey Neuhoff, Covanta vice president and general manager of the Mid-Atlantic Region.

Regan said early damage assessments show the primary plant systems are intact, with damage contained to the cranes in the waste storage pit and roof.

Inspections are being completed, he said, and repair work has already begun. The site will reopen as soon as it’s safe to do so, though Regan did not give an estimate.

The origin of the fire is still unknown, the Fairfax County page explains, but the Fire Marshall will conduct an investigation. There have been several fires at the facility — four that Fairfax Fire and Rescue has responded to since January 2016 — but “they are almost always localized and extinguished quickly.”

As for improving the facility to prevent future fires, the facility operator Covanta is scheduled to with county staff in the coming weeks to discuss a recovery plan, the FAQ statement says: “to include repairing and enhancing existing equipment to better protect the plant and the community. Covanta is evaluating innovative technol-

Morning Raid Spread Fear

in her English for Speakers of Other Languages class are coming to school scared, some that parents may not be there to pick them up at the end of the day.

“There is genuine fear,” said state Sen. George Barker (D-39), “that little kids should not have. A political decision may sound great until you see the faces of the individuals affected.”

Supervisor Dan Storck (D-Mount Vernon) said since word of ICE activity in Mount Vernon started circulating last week, he’s received numerous concerned calls and emails about people being unreasonably disturbed.

“At the core of this, it’s about a diverse community wanting to make sure we honor and respect that by not going after people that may be different, look different from us.”

At the same time, Storck said, “we recognize, we don’t want people that are criminals to be out in our community. There’s a balance we always want. I don’t think our President has that balance in what he does.”

Storck said he’s been in touch with the Mount Vernon District police station about citizens’ concerns over ICE activity. He said he was told they “usually don’t know what’s going on,” with ICE or other federal law enforcement operations.

FCPD spokesperson Master Police Officer Don Gotthardt said in an email county police had no role in any “federal raids,” and, “in fact, have not been made aware of any in Fairfax County.”

TRAFFIC WAS SLOWED significantly

Saturday afternoon Feb. 11 on I-66 around Centreville where a number of both FCPD and ICE vehicles had lights flashing and a large van with about a dozen Latino male passengers were pulled over.

In this case, Gotthardt said an FCPD officer made a routine stop for a traffic violation and then, after seeking advice from a patrol supervisor, contacted ICE to assist with interviews.

Gotthardt said he did not know the nature of the conversations, though both he and an ICE official confirmed that none of the men were arrested and were allowed to re-load the van and resume driving.

When asked to give further detail on the FCPD protocol for collaborating with ICE, Gotthardt did not respond in time for print.

Board of Supervisors Chairman Sharon Bulova said she hasn’t been made aware of any more activity by ICE than what other citizens are seeing themselves or on the news.

But, as she said she has asserted numerous times, Fairfax County is a “Very diverse community — people have come from all over the globe. It’s important that we maintain a harmonious community.”

Bulova also said she’s watching carefully “to make sure all members of our communities are being treated fairly.”

After having listened to the story from Ramirez, Roach and Brewster, immigration lawyer Nicholas Marritz of the Legal Aid Justice Center in Falls Church doesn’t believe that was the case across from Rising Hope.

“Stopping a group of people without reasonable suspicion, seems to be on extremely questionable legal footing to me,” Marritz said. “You have the right not to be seized,

Marritz said the men’s narrative underscores the need for more people to understand and assert their rights.

“Everyone is protected by the Constitution,” he said. “You have the right to remain silent, to say ‘I’m not going to tell you about immigration status,’ to ask to talk to an attorney. No one should have to suffer an indignity like this.”

Storck said the stress and fear he’s heard from community members, especially among children, is “not what we want in Mount Vernon, in Fairfax County.”

“This is not the United States of America that I voted for, nor the kind of country in think the vast majority of people really want,” Storck continued. “We need solutions, not more fear. Solutions, by recognizing the millions of undocumented residents, and providing a path to be here legally, protecting their children in the meantime. Protecting our children, frankly.”

Storck said he planned to speak with senior FCPD leadership and find out more about their protocol for interacting with ICE.

The hypothermia shelter at Rising Hope is coordinated by New Hope Housing.

Fairfax County Names Police Auditor

Richard G. Schott, a 27-year veteran of the FBI, was appointed by the Board of Supervisors to be Fairfax County's first-ever independent police auditor.

The announcement of Schott's hiring came at the board's Feb. 14 meeting. As auditor, Schott will report directly to the board and have numerous oversight responsibilities. Among them, Fairfax County said:

- * Monitoring and reviewing internal investigations of Police Department officer-involved shootings, in-custody deaths and use-of-force cases in which an individual is killed or seriously injured.

- * Requesting further investigations if he determines that an internal investigation was deficient or conclusions were not supported by the evidence.

- * Issuing public reports for each reviewed internal investigation.

- * Reviewing all resident complaint investigations of alleged excessive or unnecessary force by officers.

- * Producing annual reports that analyze trends and recommend improvements.

Schott will start full-time, paid work April 17 this year — salary is set at $143,000 — joined by two assistants.

Creation of an independent auditor was a recommendation by the Ad Hoc Police Practices Review Commission for increased oversight of Fairfax County Police.

Another was creation of a civilian review panel. The supervisors approved that body as well, set to be a nine-member group of volunteers who will review complaints of police misconduct or abuse of power.

During closed session Feb. 14, the board was scheduled to review applications and nominees for those positions. However no announcement was made following the closed-door meeting.

Board of Supervisors chairman Sharon Bulova said she was pleased to welcome Schott as the first auditor.

"In this newly established position, Mr. Schott will provide increased accountability and transparency to the Fairfax County Police Department," Bulova said in a statement.

According to Fairfax County, Schott's FBI career includes working as a special agent with local law enforcement and training state and local officers, "including legal issues associated with police officers' use of force and deadly force."

He also serves as an FBI Academy instructor at Quantico, the county said, teaching new agents about basic constitutional criminal procedure and legal consequences when they employ force.

Ending Gerrymandering Important to Region

Efforts appear dead for this session, but elections later this year provide new opportunities.

While three bills that could have reined in the runaway gerrymandering in Virginia made it through the Virginia Senate to crossover, they died on Tuesday morning in a House subcommittee, despite some vocal Republican support.

In Virginia, Democrats have won every statewide election since 2010, and notably Barack Obama won the state in 2008 by more than 52 percent of the vote. Many of these victories have been narrow. In 2009, Republicans won Governor, Lt. Governor and Attorney General by strong margins.

It is reasonable, given these results, to expect that representation at the state level would be approximately even, with either Republicans or Democrats holding a small advantage. Instead, Republicans control the House of Delegates 66 to 34, and the Virginia Senate 21 to 19.

There is little competition for these seats as a result.

According to OneVirginia2021, an advocacy group for ending gerrymandering, 56 candidates in the House of Delegates faced no real competition in the last general election in 2013, with 22 Democrats and 34 Republicans facing no major-party challenger. In the end, only two seats changed parties.

These same lawmakers are set to redraw the the boundaries for state legislative and congressional districts after the 2020 census, and the just-killed proposed constitutional amendments would have required that these not be motivated by partisan politics. By far the best approach would be to turn the process over to a non-partisan commission to draw boundaries in the best interests of Virginia citizens.

One of the proposals, cosponsored by Sen. Jill Vogel (R) and Sen. Janet Howell (D), passed the Senate 31-9, but died in the House subcommittee on a 5-2 vote.

It matters more here in Northern Virginia. Virginia is a Dillon Rule state, which means that localities have only the power specifically given to them by the General Assembly. It means that the economic engines of the state in Northern Virginia provide most of the financial wherewithal but citizens in Alexandria, Arlington and Fairfax County are often unable to govern themselves as they wish because of control by a far more conservative General Assembly.

Real change starts locally. Anyone seeking change should tune in for this year's elections in Virginia, including all the seats in the General Assembly, plus Governor, Lieutenant Governor and Attorney General. Every voter will choose one Virginia Senator and one member of the Virginia House of Delegates.

Nonpartisan redistricting could support the best interests of the population, not the politicians.

In 2016:
Hillary Clinton (D) 1,981,473 (49.75%);

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

An Open Letter to Sen Mitch McConnell

Dear Senator McConnell,

While we may disagree on many issues, I respect the office you hold. I was taught that the office of Senator was one to be executed with respect and dignity. Because of this, I am appalled at your conduct toward Senator Warren on the Floor during the Sessions debate. The office you hold is bigger than your party. There are young children (my children, to be specific) looking to you as an example of someone to be held in the highest esteem. Rather, I had to explain to them why you would dismiss a reading of the words of Coretta Scott King; a national hero, whose story they are learning about in school. I explained to my children that Mrs. King was the true definition of a patriot. She and Dr. King changed the world with both their unapologetic love and their refusal to cower to the oppressors trying to silence them.

Now I will say thank you. Because of your shameful behavior, I've had the opportunity to teach my children the difference between standing up for what's right and trying to silence the truth for personal gain. Because you're a father yourself, I'm sure you know that tangible examples are always more effective than fables, so I predict this one will linger in their memory banks. Subsequent to watching the Senate confirmations unfold, my 7-year-old daughter has announced that she wants to be President when she grows up. Who knows, maybe seeing you bully Senator Warren on the Floor was what pushed her to this resolution! She is being raised to value truth, honor and respect for her fellow citizens above greed and bigotry and, in part thanks to you, she will be an extraordinary civil servant.

Alarming Tendencies

To the Editor:

Last week Congressman Gerry Connolly, my representative in the 11th district, sent the following tweet: "Maybe his enablers will rouse themselves when the Browns come for them. I, for one, will resist." Wow! Not sure what his intent was but to refer to evil people under Hitler to those of us who voted for President Trump is outrageous. Unfortunately, it appears that many Democrats these days are using connection to Hitler to make their attacks on people who support President Trump. Yet as we witness on TV, rioters, reportedly including professors, set fires at the University of California at Berkeley in opposition to a conservative speaker and Trump supporter who was scheduled to speak there. It seems to me that this should alarm both democrats and republicans as to how low people are sinking in our nation and especially how low the Democratic Party has sunk.

Voting Rights Under Attack

To the Editor:

Unsatisfied with the existing identification requirements to vote in Virginia, on Feb. 1 Republicans in Virginia's House of Delegates voted to make it even harder to vote in state elections. If this were to pass, in order to register to vote in Virginia's state elections, Virginians would need to prove citizenship by providing a birth certificate, a passport, or naturalization documents. This is part of the continued Trump-led Republican effort to attack the very soul of our democracy by raising concerns about non-existent voter fraud and then pretending to fight it.

These restrictions will not stop voter fraud because that fraud does not exist. What the restrictions will do is send Virginians rooting through boxes of decades-old files containing birth certificates and passports. Passports are expensive, and birth certificates are hard to obtain, especially if you were born somewhere outside the U.S. These restrictions will keep ordinary, every day Virginians from voting to choose their representatives.

Republicans are doing their best to keep Virginians from the polls, but they cannot keep us from the phones. Unless you are currently holding your birth certificate or passport in your hands, I recommend picking up your phone and calling your state senator before they try to take that away too.

Virginia Electric and Power Company doing business as Dominion Virginia Power plans to enhance security at its electric power station at 8234 Roseland Drive in Fairfax Station.

The 7.81 acre substation was built on its 56.123 acre site in 1965.

The Planning Commission on Feb. 8 gave Dominion its recommendation for approval for a 15- to 20-foot security fence, anti-ram barriers, camera enhancements and emergency lighting.

The Federal Energy Regulation Commission directed the project “to address risks of physical threats and vulnerabilities of bulk-power systems,” according to staff report prepared by Harold Ellis, of Department and Zoning staff.

The Board of Supervisors was scheduled to give final authorization for the project at its Board meeting on Feb. 14.

“In this day and age, we will be seeing more applications coming to secure our public facilities,” said Peter Murphy, Springfield District Chairman and Planning Commission Chair. “So this is probably a preview of coming attractions.”

Currently, all of the existing features are surrounded by a chain-link fence, which is planned to be replaced by a “taller more secure, powder-coated galvanized steel fence,” according to Planning Commission documents.

The substation includes higher-profile equipment including transformer and backbones (transmission lines).

John Bentz, president of the Roseland Homeowners Association, attended the Feb. 8 public hearing to tell the Commission of the HOA’s agreement with Dominion Electric that the electric company will repair any damage to Roseland Drive, which is the site access point to the substation.

“Verbally,” he said, when asked about the agreement.

Murphy and the Planning Commission suggested placing the agreement in development conditions of the project.

“That makes it better for us,” said Bentz.

Celebrating Black History Month

Educators say these lessons are urgently needed in current racial climate.

BY MARILYN CAMPBELL
THE CONNECTION

Even though Elavie Ndura knows that it is a daunting challenge to help children grasp the entirety of the African American experience in the shortest month of the year, each February she and other educators give it their best effort. This year, they feel it's more important than ever.

"With all of the racial experiences we're having these days, it's critical that children know their history and are not basing their knowledge on only what they see on television or what they hear from their friends," said Elavie Ndura, Ed.D., professor of education at George Mason University in Fairfax. "Research shows that children who understand their histories do better in school and in society, so it's critical that families teach their children about their history."

Ndura believes that the current racial climate in the U.S. gives this year's Black History Month additional significance. A study released last month by the Pew Research Center shows that among Americans, 61 percent of blacks, 58 percent of Hispanics and 45 percent of whites say that race relations in the United States are generally bad. Local educators say Black History Month offers opportunities to address issues of race by allowing the past to inform the present.

"We have seen for more than a year how people from different political viewpoints, but also races, sexes, cultures, religions, sexual orientations, and socioeconomic statuses related to each other in the present political climate, and it was troublesome," said Mika'il A. Petin, Ph.D., associate director of African and African American Studies at George Mason University. "Teaching the history of Black or African-heritage peoples in this month ... is necessary to starting difficult conversations about ... current race relations ... and social inequalities."

Race relations in our society have been deeply strained during the election and as America adjusts to a new presidential administration. These divisions make African American history lessons critical for all children, but particularly for black children, says Ndura. "As African American parents we have a serious duty to educate our own youth," she said. "Knowing your history grounds and anchors you firmly so that you are not wavered in the wrong direction because of whatever feelings might be caused by what you're seeing on the news."

Books that explore African American experiences are on display at libraries and bookstores during Black History Month.

— Mika'il A. Petin, Ph.D.,

Black history lessons work best when they're intentional and creative, advises Jessica Lewis, Ed.D., assistant professor of education and human services at Marymount University in Arlington. "Children benefit when they are exposed to a variety of perspectives, ideas and stories because it helps expand their view of the world and people living in it," she said. "The ability to understand and identify with others and their experiences is a powerful, life-long lesson."

Lewis advises making a trip to a local bookstore or library to find books that offer a glimpse of African American history and suggests that parents begin with books on subjects that interest their children. "[Parents] may start with readings on sports, or science, or biographies of the accomplishments and hardships of individuals who persisted throughout history to make a difference," she said. "Parents can ... select books by black authors and illustrators and then take the time to read the story together, discuss the pictures, and ask questions about what the characters are feeling and experiencing."

Other ideas include exploring music with roots in African American history such as ragtime, jazz, gospel and blues, making a timeline of major events that occurred during the Civil Rights Movement, and reading speeches from civil rights leaders and then helping children write their own speech about what they are inspired to change in the world. Such activities can open a natural discussion and need not be complicated to be effective, says Lewis.

"Parents are their children's first educators," said Lewis. "It is important for parents to help their children understand the experiences of other children who are not like them because it builds empathy and a deeper sense of community."

One roadblock to such honest conversations, cautions Petin, is a discomfort with discussions of racial differences.

"Let's be frank, some white Americans who are politically and socially conservative become noticeably uncomfortable with the topic of race, and therefore find difficulty with Black History Month," he said. "Yet, Black History Month — similar to the Black Lives Matter movement — does not express superiority over others. Both the month of celebration and sociopolitical movement are forms of resistance to deliberate attempts to conceal the worthiness of Black or African-heritage people in this country."

Some people "may attack Black History Month and Black Lives Matter as political correctness and identity politics, but I would argue that they are not seeing the humanity in both efforts," continued Petin. He emphasized the importance of taking a purposeful approach to teaching children about black history. "I think that all parents must intentionally search for, study, and celebrate those who are on the margins, living in the shadows, perceived as voiceless, and regarded as invisible. Too often, black Americans were those marginal, shadowed, voiceless, and invisible people. All parents should be honest about that, and should have confidence in the U.S. only being great when they and their children educate themselves on this country's history in more inclusive terms."

Schools often play a significant role in the month's activities. Students at the Bullis School in Potomac, Md., for example, attend a Black History Month assembly each February. This year's event was led by several students who shared their thoughts, essays and other projects on a variety of topics. "Diverse literature is always a great idea," added Allison Ewing, chair of the social studies department at Bullis.

"Twenty-eight days of teachable moments" is one way that Petin characterizes Black History Month. "It is never too early to start preparing your kids for a world that is increasingly more connected and shrinking," he said. "When all parents teach their children how to develop skill sets to understand, value, empathize, and celebrate those who may be different than them, the children are better prepared to function in the world."

Fairview Elementary School Student Artists Visit Richmond

On Sunday, Feb. 12, Del. Eileen Filler-Corn (D-41) hosted student artists and their families from Fairview Elementary School in Fairfax for a reception and capitol tour in Richmond. Fairview Elementary School Principal Lynn Mayer and Fairview Art Teachers Heather Devlin and Vered Grossman were also in attendance.

Since January, the works of these young artists have been displayed on the fourth floor of the General Assembly building, in the hallway leading to Filler-Corn's Richmond office. The student artists are a variety of ages and used a variety of mediums in their artwork. This is the second time that Filler-Corn has featured artwork from a local elementary school, having hosted White Oaks Elementary the previous year.

"Spending time with these creative young people and their proud parents was a highlight for me and truly made my day. Their energy and enthusiasm is contagious," said Filler-Corn.

Filler-Corn, who also serves as chair of the General Assembly Arts Caucus, was pleased that so many families made the trip down to Richmond. She posed for pictures with all the student artists as they pointed out their artwork to her and their very proud parents.

"You never know who might have walked by these paintings," Filler-Corn explained to the students. "Delegates, Senators, and Cabinet Secretaries...even the Governor, have all viewed your beautiful work. You should be so proud of yourselves."

Following the reception in the General Assembly Building, the entire group, including Del. Filler-Corn, walked over to the Capitol for an official tour, with a stop on the Floor of the chamber of the House of Delegates. The students listened intently to both the tour guide's explanation of the history of the building, and the Delegate's stories of a day in the life of a Member of the General Assembly. She reminded the children, that one day, they too could sit and vote in the House as she does today.

Filler-Corn hopes to continue the tradition with other local elementary schools in the 41st District. "There are nine elementary schools in my district. I look forward to continuing the tradition we started this session for years to come," Del. Filler-Corn said.

Nabila A. Guled is a senior majoring in organizational leadership. Nabila has been named to the Fort Hays State University Dean's Honor Roll for the fall 2016 semester.

Ms Meghan Chandler Presing of Fairfax earned a MSW - Master of Social Work at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. UWM is the second largest university in the State of Wisconsin, with approximately 26,000 undergraduate and graduate students.

James Hua Lau a senior at Hampden-Sydney College, has been recognized as an outstanding campus leader in the 2016 edition of Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges. James is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Michael N. Lau of Springfield, VA.

Forty-three students from Hampden-Sydney College were selected for this year's edition. Students are nominated by seniors, administrators, faculty, and coaches based on their academic achievement, service to the community, leadership in extracurricular activities, and potential for continued success. They join a select group of students from more than 2000 institutions of higher learning in all fifty states, the District of Columbia, and several foreign nations.

A private college for men, Hampden-Sydney is ranked nationally by U.S. News & World Report. The College is known for its liberal arts curriculum, the Honor Code which stresses individual and collective responsibility, and a focus on the education of young men.

Three Fairfax County residents have been recognized for academic excellence during the fall 2016 semester at New River Community College.

Improve Driver Laws, Reduce Road Deaths

Virginia's highway safety report card marked in red.

BY BILL BRONROTT
THE CONNECTION

Clifton resident Debbie Sausville represented Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) at a recent Capitol Hill news conference where Advocates for Highway and Auto Safety (Advocates) issued "report cards" rating all 50 states and the District of Columbia on their progress toward adopting 15 optimal laws that scientific studies, data analysis and real world experience show are effective at preventing death and injury on roadways.

The D.C.-based highway and auto safety watchdog group unveiled its "2017 Roadmap of State Highway Safety Laws" report as a call to action for lawmakers in every state capital to close gaps in 15 laws covering seat belts, child booster seats, teen graduated driver licensing programs, motorcycle helmets, impaired driving, and texting while driving.

The Advocates' report rated each state Green (good), Yellow (caution) or Red (danger) based on the number of the 15 traffic safety measures enacted into law.

Advocates' vice president of governmental affairs Cathy Chase, a resident of Falls Church, revealed that, "Virginia received a Red report card and was rated among the worst performing states in the nation for having adopted only five of the 15 laws. The Commonwealth is lacking a front and rear primary enforcement seat belt law, booster seat law, six of seven teen driving provisions, and an open container law."

The neighboring states of Maryland, West Virginia and North Carolina earned Yellow ratings, and the District of Columbia and Delaware received Green scores.

In Virginia, 753 people died in traffic crashes in 2015, seven percent higher than the 703 fatalities in 2014. The annual economic cost of crashes is nearly $5 billion in Virginia.

KRISTIN WENOLD/EVENT DIGITAL PHOTOGRAPHY

MADD volunteer Debbie Sausville of Clifton with a photo of her stepdaughter Lauren who, at age 16, died in a crash after drinking.

Sausville's stepdaughter Lauren, at age 16, died in a crash in Fairfax County in 2004 after drinking underage. She had only obtained her driver's license three weeks earlier. Over the past decade, Sausville has volunteered with MADD to speak out for greater teen driving safety. She welcomed the new report for "putting a bright spotlight on dangerous loopholes in our laws through which children and adults are suffering needlessly," and called for "our state lawmakers to embrace these lifesaving laws to help keep families safe and whole."

Sausville praised Virginia for having already adopting two of MADD's priorities laws — an ignition interlock requirement for all drunk driving offenders and child endangerment penalties for those who drive drunk with children in the car.

"It is now time to finally ban the possession and consumption of alcohol beverages in motor vehicles in Virginia, which is already the law in 40 states and D.C.," Sausville said.

Chase pointed out that Virginia's seat belt law loophole allows back seat passengers to ride unbuckled and front seat belt use is still a secondary offense in the state, meaning that police cannot stop a vehicle just because an occupant is not buckled up. Front seat occupants can be ticketed for not wearing a seat belt only if the driver is stopped for another offense.

Catherine Chase of Falls Church, the vice president of Advocates for Highway and Auto Safety which produced the state report cards.

In 2014, Virginia's seat belt use rate lagged 10 points behind the national average of 87 percent.

An estimated 287 lives were saved by seat belt use in Virginia in 2015, but an additional 113 deaths could have been prevented if all vehicle occupants had been buckled up, according to the U.S. Department of Transportation (US DOT).

"Most states and D.C. have a primary seat belt law for front seat occupants," Chase said, "and their belt use rates are higher than secondary enforcement states like Virginia."

In 2016, states with primary enforcement seat belt laws for front seat passengers had a 92 percent average belt use rate, while belt use in states with secondary enforcement laws was 83 percent, according to US DOT data.

The Virginia-based Insurance Institute for Highway Safety (IIHS) has found that when states strengthen their laws from second-

Virginia's 2017 Highway Safety Laws Report Card (Black = credit; Red = missing law)

OCCUPANT PROTECTION

-  Primary Enforcement Seat Belt Law for all front seat occupants
-  Primary Enforcement Seat Belt Law for rear seat occupants
- * All-Rider Motorcycle Helmet Law

CHILD PASSENGER SAFETY

-  Child Booster Seats: Children who have outgrown the height and weight limit of a forward-facing car safety seat should be placed in a booster seat until at least age eight and 57 inches tall.

GRADUATED DRIVER'S LICENSING FOR TEENS

-  Minimum Age 16 for Learner's Permit
- * 6-Month Holding Period: A beginning teen driver must be supervised by an adult licensed driver at all times during the learner's stage. If the learner is citation-free for six months, he or she may progress to the intermediate stage.
-  Supervised Driving Requirement: At least 50 hours of behind-the-wheel training, including 10 hours at night, with an adult licensed driver.
-  Nighttime Driving Restriction: No unsupervised driving from at least 10 p.m. to 5 a.m. seven days a week.
-  Passenger Restriction: No more than one non-familial passenger under age 21.
-  Cell Phone Restriction: No use of cellular devices (hand-held, hands-free, text messaging) by beginning teen drivers, except in the case of an emergency.
-  Age 18 Unrestricted License: A teen driver is prohibited from obtaining an unrestricted licensed until age 18, and either the nighttime or passenger restrictions must last until age 18.

IMPAIRED DRIVING

- * Ignition interlocks for all drunk driving offenders
- * Child Endangerment Law: Penalties for people who drive while impaired with children in the vehicle.
-  Open Container Law

DISTRACTED DRIVING

- * All-Driver Text Messaging Restriction

ary to primary enforcement, driver death rates drop by an estimated seven percent.

The theme of the 2017 roadmap report is "Have We Forgotten What Saves Lives?" Chase said that "as a safety advocate and a Virginia parent, I hope the answer to this question is a resounding 'No.' This failing report card should serve as a wake-up call for our state policymakers to advance the 10 basic, effective laws we're currently lacking."

Clifton Community Gathers for 3rd Annual Ping Pong Tournament

BY ALEXANDRA TECCO
THE CONNECTION

The joy of physical activity and community spirit was displayed at Clifton's 3rd annual Ping Pong Tournament hosted by the Clifton Betterment Association. Participants gathered Saturday, Feb. 11 at the Town Hall to participate in divisions ranging from youth through adults. The unifying elements of the players of various levels was the enjoyment, laughter and fun they had during the matches while white or orange plastic balls whizzed back and forth.

The tournament is "a way to provide a fun fitness activity in the middle of winter," explained Lynne Strang, Coordinator of Get Fit Clifton. Throughout the year they host walks, demos and other activities to encourage fitness and community in Clifton. The February Ping Pong Tournament was created with special consideration to the weather and the unique activity that can be enjoyed inside and by a wide variety of people.

Martha Braden, 80, shared her love of ping pong and the benefits it has for people of all ages. She enjoys the low impact exercise of ping pong, the benefits to balance, lower and upper body strength, hand-eye coordination and the mental exercise of keeping score. "My father taught me ping pong when I was 5," Braden said after winning her first match.

In the youth division, Joel Byrne, 9, placed first and Annabelle Betz, 11, placed second; both are students at Union Mill. "It's a chance to get out, do some fun things and get award certificates," said Byrne after receiving his certificate for placing in the top two. Jeff Stein and Jason Mitchell played a few intense matches, sending balls flying in back and forth volleys. "It's a fun way to spend a few hours," Stein said. "It's a nice social event."

"And there's cookies," Mitchell added.

All the attendees received the custom ping pong cookie which commemorated the event. The cookies were designed and donated by Lauren Betz of Clifton's Sweet Annaline's bakery. Individually wrapped in cellophane bags, they featured a ping pong paddle and ball with CBA emblazoned in red frosting.

Michelle Stein, president of the CBA, pointed out the murals on the walls encircling the room when asked about the tournament. Every house in Clifton is captured in the paintings. The tournament, Stein explained, was a casual way for the people of Clifton to "to see each other even in the winter," to have fun and "come together" as a community that's more than just the houses that make it up.

'Mementos Mori' at Workhouse

BY DAVID SIEGEL
THE CONNECTION

Where & When

Arts are for everyone. And arts audiences are no longer content to be passive viewers. They want an experience," said Ava Spece, CEO and President, Workhouse Arts Center. "We plan to build interactive experiences for visitors to the Workhouse."

True to Spece's vision, there will be a singular regional performance of the award-winning, multi-media "Mementos Mori" from the Chicago-based Manual Cinema collective at the Workhouse.

"Mementos Mori" will be a unique experience for Workhouse audience members; they will become part of a spectacular controlled chaos being made right before them," said Julia Miller, co-artistic director, Manual Cinema. Miller is one of the key creative minds behind "Mementos Mori." Of interest, Miller is a native of Fairfax County graduating from Hayfield High School not so long ago.

So what is "Mementos Mori"? "It is an unusual story that is a lively, beguiling, extraordinary meditation on death and dying performed live with puppets," said Miller.

The Workhouse audience will come to know an elderly film projectionist seeking a new lease on life; along with a ghost exploring the afterlife with her iPhone; and a 7-year-old who discovers unexpected clues about living life. And there is an unexpected bright, cheery young woman who is trying to discover her own place in the underworld.

Audience members will witness six puppeteers using hundreds of paper silhouette puppets manipulating them into movement and actions. "Mementos Mori" will use different creative elements including live performance and original mood-setting live music. The production will fuse together traditional live performance theater, storytelling, mood-setting music, sound effects and cinema with digital technology techniques meant to enthrall.

At the Workhouse, patrons will see multiple overhead projectors, two cameras, and three screens and theatrical lighting to create a live "movie" in their presence. Technical elements and activities will not be hidden away from patrons' notice. Unlike more traditional performing arts, "Mementos Mori" technical production features are part of the live performance and meant to be seen.

Manual Cinema's visit to the Workhouse is sponsored in part by the Mid Atlantic Arts Foundation. The performance troupe is a Jim Henson Foundation recipient in support of contemporary puppet theatre. Inviting audiences, Miller described "Mementos Mori" as "living and breathing storytelling; not just moving shadow puppets." She made clear the audience should expect the unexpected with an elusive story.

See for yourself.
