Improve Driver Laws, Reduce Road Deaths

Virginia's highway safety report card marked in red.

Clifton resident Debbie Sausville represented Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) at a recent Capitol Hill news conference where Advocates for Highway and Auto Safety (Advocates) issued "report cards" rating all 50 states and the District of Columbia on their progress toward adopting 15 optimal laws that scientific studies, data analysis and real world experience show are effective at preventing death and injury on roadways.

The D.C.-based highway and auto safety watchdog group unveiled its "2017 Roadmap of State Highway Safety Laws" report as a call to action for lawmakers in every state capital to close gaps in 15 laws covering seat belts, child booster seats, teen graduated driver licensing programs, motorcycle helmets, impaired driving, and texting while driving.

The Advocates' report rated each state Green (good), Yellow (caution) or Red (danger) based on the number of the 15 traffic safety measures enacted into law.

Advocates' vice president of governmental affairs Cathy Chase, a resident of Falls Church, revealed that, "Virginia received a Red report card and was rated among the worst performing states in the nation for having adopted only five of the 15 laws. The Commonwealth is lacking a front and rear primary enforcement seat belt law, booster seat law, six of seven teen driving provisions, and an open container law."

The neighboring states of Maryland, West Virginia and North Carolina earned Yellow ratings, and the District of Columbia and Delaware received Green scores.

In Virginia, 753 people died in traffic crashes in 2015, seven percent higher than the 703 fatalities in 2014. The annual economic cost of crashes is nearly $5 billion in Virginia.

Sausville's stepdaughter Lauren, at age 16, died in a crash in Fairfax County in 2004 after drinking underage. She had only obtained her driver's license three weeks earlier. Over the past decade, Sausville has volunteered with MADD to speak out for greater teen driving safety. She welcomed the new report for "putting a bright spotlight on dangerous loopholes in our laws through which children and adults are suffering needlessly," and called for "our state lawmakers to embrace

Hugo's Opioid Prescription Limit Bill Passes

Deaths from prescription opioids have more than quadrupled since 1999.

BY TIM PETERSON
THE CONNECTION

Rob Anderson was prescribed 30 days-worth of hydrocodone for pain, after he had four wisdom teeth removed in 10th grade. “I took one of them and I didn’t like it, it gave me a sick feeling,” Anderson said. “And I had another 29 days worth of these pain-killers that I could’ve done anything with.” Anderson said he just threw them away. He could have sold them, given them away, but he didn’t.

He didn’t question the prescription when at the oral surgeon’s; his parents took care of picking it up, though they thought the regimen was “crazy too.”

Many like Anderson have been hanging on to those excess addictive pain pills, and taking the full prescription for no other reason than to finish it.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, the majority of drug overdose deaths in the United States involve an opioid — a trend on the rise and arguably linked to the amount of those meds being prescribed. Deaths from prescription opioids such as oxycodone, hydrocodone and methadone have more than quadrupled since 1999, according to the CDC.

Heroin use is also trending up, and experts say 75 percent of new users reported abusing prescription opioids before switching to heroin — a cheaper alternative.

Fairfax County and Virginia aren’t excluded from what’s being called an epidemic.

“We’re still better than some jurisdictions in Virginia,” said Supervisor Pat Herrity (R-Springfield), “The Shenandoah Valley, Roanoke area, it’s devastating down there.”

“But the situation is getting worse here,” Herrity added. The supervisor has hosted several town hall meetings to raise awareness to the issue. In a newsletter earlier this year, he reported that in the final week of 2016, there were four heroin overdose deaths in Fairfax County in a two-day period.

“We must face the fact that the opioid crisis is in our neighborhoods and schools,” Herrity wrote.

The CDC recommends improving opioid prescribing to reduce people’s exposure to the drugs and prevent and stop addiction.

Working with Herrity, Del. Tim Hugo (R-40) developed and introduced a bill to limit prescriptions of opioid pain medicine.

“It’s heartbreaking to hear some of these stories,” Hugo said. “People get addicted, have family members addicted. You feel for them. Everyone’s realizing there’s a great problem out there.”

Anderson is a legislative aide for Hugo. When he told the delegate about his own experience with excessive prescribing, it only further solidified how pervasive it is.

Hugo’s bill HB 1885, which passed both the Virginia House and Senate as of Feb. 15, and will go before Gov. Terry McAuliffe, limits opioid prescriptions to seven days. Otherwise the prescriber is required to request information about the patient from the Prescription Monitoring Program.

“Too often patients are intentionally visiting more than one physician and are being prescribed multiple opioids,” said Hugo said in a statement. “Directing physicians to verify a patient’s prescription history can prevent inadvertent overprescribing and help in reducing opioid addiction.”

Though Hugo considers the bill a win, he likens the overdose epidemic to the scourge of sex trafficking that he pushed legislation to curb for at least four years. “I assume we’re going to be doing the same thing here,” said Hugo. “We have to keep chipping away at it. This is one definitely worth fighting for.”

“We’ve got a big fight on our hands,” Hugo added, “but this is a big step in the right direction. It’s something attacking all socioeconomic groups. I really think you have to push back.”

Filler-Corn’s HB 2404 Passes with Amendments

Bill would create PANDAS advisory council.

BY TIM PETERSON
THE CONNECTION

Overnight, Alexandria resident Carol Quick’s 9-year-old son developed an eating disorder — an obsessive-compulsive disorder, anxiety. “He started displaying very unusual and alarming symptoms, when he was 9,” Quick said. “Enough so that we sought help from the pediatrician, had to go to emergency room for dehydration.” At the time, Quick’s pediatrician dismissed the symptoms as simply anxiety.

Two years later, Quick’s son became significantly worse. A psychiatrist suggested he might be suffering from Pediatric Autoimmune Neuropsychiatric Disorders Associated with Streptococcal Infections (PANDAS).

After waiting months for an appointment with a specialist, the Quicks’ first PANDAS diagnosis was confirmed. Their son was barely able to leave the house to attend school, he was so underweight due to self-imposed restricted eating.

“For an 11-year-old to have such severe, despondent, depression, he didn’t understand.” Quick said. “He knew something was wrong, but didn’t know why. He was sad, embarrassed. Just by not wanting to be at school, feeling so scared when he was there.”

In PANDAS, the body produces antibodies in reaction to the strep bacteria, some of which target the brain, which can result in inflammation, OCD tics and other neuropsychiatric symptoms.

Diagnosing PANDAS is clinical, rather than laboratory-based, and many physicians don’t have a protocol for treating it, according to the National Institute of Mental Health. The PANDAS Network information and advocacy nonprofit estimates PANDAS and the related Pediatric Acute-onset Neuropsychiatric Syndrome (PANS) affects as many as 1 in 200 children.

“They also were still very skeptical this was an actual, true, diagnosis,” Quick said of her experience with various doctors, “which is just so disheartening when you’re trying to help your child. Finally you realize what he has can be treated. And your pediatrician says I don’t really think that’s true.”

Quick said it’s very difficult to get treatment for PANDAS because there are so few specialists, and those that exist don’t take insurance.

Teresa Champion of Springfield had a similarly slow and frustrating process with her son becoming diagnosed and treated for PANDAS.

But Champion’s son, 23, had a pre-existing condition of autism that “muddled the water” for a lot of practitioners. That was seen as the root of other issues.

Like Quick’s son, he had sudden-onset separation anxiety, panic attacks and an eating disorder.

“This is a diagnosis that waxes and wanes,” Champion said. “It isn’t just bacterial, it can be viruses, cold, flu, that triggers the immune system to respond. The difference is my son really didn’t get treatment. The diagnosis teased out from autism until much older. It was determined to be pediatric, many practitioners don’t think it carried over into adulthood, which is absurd.” Quick and Champion agree, by far the most challenging aspect of PANDAS is getting medical treatment. They’re hoping that that will change, for their sons and other living with either diagnosed or undiagnosed PANDAS or PANS, with a bill brought to the Virginia General Assembly by Del. Eileen Filler-Corn (D-41).

HB 2404 CALLS FOR creating an advisory council on PANDAS and PANS. The purpose of this body, according to the bill summary, would be to “advise the Commissioner of Health on research, diagnosis, treatment, and education relating to these identified disorders and syndrome.”

Champion hopes a group like this would be able to raise the level of education and training for physicians in Virginia, so there can be more treatment, including antibiotics, steroids and cognitive behavioral therapy.

Filler-Corn’s bill passed the House of Delegates on Feb. 7. The senate passed it with amendments on Feb. 20. One day later, the House agreed to the amendments and adopted it by a vote of 93 to 4.

“Having the opportunity to work with Ms. Champion, Jessica Gavin and so many other Virginians who have loved ones are affected by this disease is a reminder of why I ran for office in the first place — to help make people’s lives better,” Filler-Corn said in a statement. “For many parents, it takes an average of three years and eight different doctors before their child is diagnosed with PANS. Creating this advisory council will bring much needed awareness to this debilitating disease. I am grateful for the overwhelming bipartisan support this bill has received.”

Quick said their hope is that with this legislation, more and more pediatricians will recognize it. “There are probably a lot of kids suffering from symptoms that are related to PANDAS,” she said, “and not getting treated. Because people don’t know what it is.” For more information, visit www.nimh.nih.gov/labs-at-nimh/research-areas/clinics-and-labs/pdnb/web.shtml and www.pandasnetwork.org.

Five Suspects Charged with Gang-Related Murder

Fifteen-year-old Damaris Reyes Rivas’ death was caused by multiple forms of trauma to the upper body, the medical examiner reports. But Fairfax County Chief of Police Edwin Roessler called the Gaithersburg, Md., resident’s killing “savage and brutal.”

Remains of the teenager’s body were found in the 7100 block of Wimsatt Road in Springfield on Feb. 11. After attending a multi-jurisdictional meeting led by the Prince William County Police Department, FCPD determined there were two Fairfax County juveniles linked to a homicide investigation.

“We discovered video evidence that suggested Damaris had been murdered in the Lake Accotink area of Fairfax County,” Roessler said at a press conference Feb. 15.

FCPD was able to identify 10 suspects involved in the case, bringing charges of abduction, gang participation and murder.

As of the 15th, Roessler said 10 arrests had been made, six of which were of juveniles. Five murder charges were issued, three of those were against juvenile suspects — aged 17.

“As demonstrated in this case,” Roessler said, “the law enforcement agencies and our community members in the D.C. region always team up to make sure that the tireless work of our men and women protects our community at all times.”

Roessler said the arrests were a result of a multijurisdictional effort, including the Montgomery County Police Department, Prince William Police Department, Northern Virginia Gang Task Force, Prince George’s County, Lynchburg, the FBI and Homeland Security investigations department.

Roessler said that “gangs are an issue” in the case but would not discuss which gang is suspected to be involved in the murder.

Jay Lanham, director of the Northern Virginia Gang Task Force, said illegal gangs are recruiting juveniles at a greater clip than ever before. “We’re seeing a lot of increase in recruiting in high schools and middle schools,” he said, “which is alarming to us.”

Lanham said gangs offer protection, security, things youths think they need. But they’re also dangerous to separate from, he said.

Lanham and Roessler both encouraged

“This is difficult to combat,” Roessler said, “but we have great detectives. We’ll be tireless in making arrests. And teamwork is Roessler said it’s not known whether the dead teenager was being trafficked, nor would he comment on a motive for the killing or details of the injuries.

Franconia-Based Koinonia Donates iPads to Key Center

At the Key Center school for students with severe intellectual disabilities, Apple iPads are a game-changer. That’s according to Fairfax County school-based technology specialist Nicole Bracken.

“There’s this immediate connection,” Bracken said, of students using educational applications on the digital tablets. “They can figure things out... there’s an element of interaction, immediacy.”

Many of the students, due to their disability, have difficulty focusing on something something beyond themselves. Programs on the iPads give them the ability to demonstrate and experiment with cause-and-effect relationships real time, another skill with which many of the Key students struggle.

Six years ago, Key began a pilot program with iPod Touch devices, which Bracken said was very successful. Having a tactile device that allowed students to communicate and express themselves was invaluable. The iPads took that to another level.

Key had been operating with 28 iPads, at least one in each classroom. On Feb. 16, the school received a donation of 18 more from the Koinonia Foundation.

Koinonia is a non-profit organization based in Franconia that has been providing emergency relief services to people living in Lee District for the last half-century. That includes a food pantry, clothing closet, Hopper’s bike donation program and Christmas Wishes, where clients make an appointment to shop for donated toys, clothing, games, gift cards for their families.

The Koinonia Foundation donated 18 Apple iPads to the Key Center School in Springfield on Feb. 16.

After a formal presentation program, Koinonia executive director Robert Petitti toured the school with Bracken to see some of the older iPads in use.

In some classrooms, they can be linked to the teacher’s computer to make the lesson more accessible and easy to follow for the student.

In other classrooms, the iPad can be used as a reward for good behavior or completing a task. Five minutes of free time is most often used to watch videos on YouTube, Bracken said, like any other student.

Petitti said about 90 percent of the funding for the iPads came from one Koinonia donor. And while the Key Center is situated

Matching Pets to Their Owners

Animal shelters' counselors help Recommended Reading families find the right fit for a pet.

BY MARILYN CAMPBELL

Natasha had been abandoned and was wandering the streets of Arlington under the blaze of a hot summer sun when she was rescued and taken to a local shelter. When handlers at the shelter leashed the German Shepherd mix, she became aggressive with other animals. After months of behavior classes, however, she began to trust and her pugnacious disposition became docile. Within months, Natasha was adopted by a family with small children.

"Most people wouldn't think of a German Shepherd as a kid-friendly dog, but that's a great example of how by taking a dog at their face value and looking at their personality rather than their breed, you can end up with a great dog that you wouldn't have thought of before," said Chelsea Lindsey, communications specialist for the Animal Welfare League of Arlington.

Lindsey says that Natasha's adoption dispels a common misconception that certain breeds are better suited than others for families with children. Lindsey and other shelter counselors say that when selecting a family pet, parents should consider factors such as the animal's temperament and the family's ability to afford and care for a dog properly.

"We don't say there are breeds that are better with kids than others. Some pit bulls are great with kids and some aren't," said Lindsey. "You really have to look at the individual personality of the dog. Are they going to let kids tug on their ear or take away their toys? Just because a dog is a lab or golden retriever doesn't mean that they're going to be good with kids."

Before selecting a pet, families should do an assessment of their ability to give the new pet proper socialization, training, exercise, and attention. "You have to be realistic and honest with yourself," said Lindsey. "Puppies are appealing and hard to turn down, but they're a lot of work. Maybe your family is looking for an adult dog that is already house trained."

One of the first steps to successful pet ownership is beginning with an animal that is the right fit. Counselors are on hand at local shelters to help with the adoptions process. "We want to understand your family's environment and match it up with the best dog," said Gina Lynch, outreach coordinator for the Humane Society of Fairfax County, Inc. "Half the people who walk in to adopt a specific dog end up adopting something else after they talk to a counselor. You might want a puppy, for example, but if you're gone a lot during the day, an older dog that doesn't need as much attention might be a better match."

"When anyone adopts a dog, it's important to work closely with the counselors who know the dog best, so they can tell you about any personality issues," continued Lynch. "If a dog has recently lost its owners, for example, it might be depressed."

Becoming familiar with an animal's history before deciding to adopt is one of the recommendations Lynch offers. "It's like when you buy a used car, you want to know all you can about the car so that you can be an informed buyer," she said.

One-on-one counseling for families to help with the adjustment of adding a pet to a family is recommended, says Lynch. "We teach families that dogs have to have their own space and an area to eat," she said. "We want to give the best advice to make it a good situation. That's why the whole family has to be there. Until the dog gets used to your household, it's best to give the animal their space."

Often, young children don't have the emotional maturity necessary to control their feelings or the skill set and physical strength needed to care for an animal, says Lynch, so interactions with family pets must be observed closely by a parent to help ensure safety.

"With regard to bringing a pet home, supervision is key in all interactions to make sure that both the child and the animal are safe and comfortable and being handled appropriately," said Joanna Fortin, community outreach and adoptions manager for the Animal Welfare League of Alexandria. "It can take weeks to months to get acclimated, particularly if the pet hasn't lived with a child before. We encourage parents to be vigilant for a few months. We advise them about the potential issues that could arise so that they can coexist peacefully."

"When the family does bring the animal home, we do encourage people to use caution around food, toys or other items of high value to the dog," added Fortin. "Proactively setting boundaries with the child, like [not] touching [the dog] when he's eating or taking toys out of his mouth. Respecting those boundaries can generally set them up for success."

OPINION

Budget Season in Fairfax County

Attend a town hall meeting and express your priorities.

Alexandria and Arlington each have a meals tax, both enacted without a referendum because as urban forms of government in Virginia, their local elected bodies were authorized to enact the tax legislatively.

Fairfax County Board of Supervisors had to put the meals tax on the ballot for voters to decide, and after a heated campaign, the tax was voted down decisively.

Elections have consequences, a fact being affirmed on every level right now.

In Fairfax County, this means a more difficult budget process going forward than might otherwise have been the case. The vast majority of Fairfax County's $3.99 billion budget is financed by property taxes, and the proposed budget is based on no property tax increase.

The meals tax would have provided about $80 million for the schools; the current budget falls $61 million short of the FCPS request.

While County Executive Ed Long has said there can be no new programs in the budget defined by no tax increase, we all know that some things could be cut to make room for new, needed programs. Long will conduct an online chat answer budget questions on Friday, Feb. 24, at 3 p.m. Submit questions here: www.fairfaxcounty.gov/AskFairfax/mobile/ActiveDiscussion.aspx?roomid=131

The county will hold a series of budget town hall meetings which will include a presentation, time for questions and feedback.

The Connection welcomes letters for publication on the budget, send to editors@connectionnewspapers.com

Coal Ash Bill Passes

By SCOTT SUROVELL
STATE SENATOR (D-36)

We have one week to go in session and negotiations are rapidly reaching conclusion as we push to finish our work so we can get back to our families and our jobs.

This past week, my legislation to raise Virginia's threshold between misdemeanors and felonies from $200 to $500 failed.

Virginia's threshold has not changed since 1981. Our existing system unnecessarily focuses police and prosecutors on minor crimes instead of violent crime while tainting thousands of Virginia's suffering from depression or drug addiction with felony charges for life.

The House of Delegates passed my legislation requiring Dominion to provide better information on coal ash pollution, disaster preparedness, and recycling. I am not happy that a permitting moratorium was removed, it is better than no bill at all and the Governor will also have a chance to amend the legislation.

The House is also poised to pass my legislation that would require the police to provide police records to next of kin in deaths involving suicide or unattended deaths. Some police departments refuse to provide this information. I think it will help families achieve closure and assure high quality policing.

Two of my more significant bills have been referred for further study. As a part-time legislature, we frequently refer meritorious, but complex proposals to groups who meet outside of session that have better staff support, can take a deeper dive into policy choices, and provide a longer period for stakeholder vetting.

My legislation that would require school systems to purchase personal computing devices for all students expected to use electronic textbooks was sent to the Future of Public Elementary and Secondary Education Joint Committee. I am hopeful we will finally come up with some guidelines to make a personal digital device an essential learning tool in the Commonwealth.

Also, my legislation requiring regulation of predatory internet lenders was sent to the Virginia's Bureau of Financial Institutions who was directed to create a working group to propose a regulatory framework in 2018. Today, internet lenders are making loans in Virginia at rates north of 500 percent. For example, this week I went to www.cashnetusa.com and they are offering loans for $100, $300, or $1,800 at a daily rate of 0.8192 percent or in other words — an APR of 299 percent before you include the 15 percent "transaction fee" on your initial loan. This means if you borrow $100 and make no payments you would owe $458.86 after one year before late fees. Others have seen rates as high as 5,000 percent. We need to get this under control.

This week, I also hope to be part of negotiating the final terms of my legislation placing controls on the City of Alexandria's raw sewage discharges.

The House passed similar legislation that takes a different approach. Also, about 10 more of my bills are set to pass the House of Delegates this week.

We will begin the process of packing up our office in preparation of moving to temporary office space for the next four years. The current General Assembly Building is an agglomeration of four asbestos-laden, leaky, and unreliable buildings with uncoordinated elevators and lousy accessibility. We will move down the hill for four years as "the GAB" is demolished and reconstructed through 2022. Finally, I have received nearly 400 responses to my Constituent Survey. Please make sure you provide your opinions soon at www.scottsurovell.org/survey.

It is an honor to serve as your state senator.

Reduce Deaths

these lifesaving laws to help keep families safe and whole.”

Sausville praised Virginia for having already adopting two of MADD’s priorities laws — an ignition interlock requirement for all drunk driving offenders and child endangerment penalties for those who drive drunk with children in the car.

“It is now time to finally ban the possession and consumption of alcohol beverages in motor vehicles in Virginia, which is already the law in 40 states and D.C.,” Sausville said.

Chase pointed out that Virginia’s seat belt law loophole allows back seat passengers to ride unbuckled and front seat belt use is still a secondary offense in the state, meaning that police cannot stop a vehicle just because an occupant is not buckled up. Front seat occupants can be ticketed for not wearing a seat belt only if the driver is stopped for another offense.

In 2014, Virginia’s seat belt use rate lagged 10 points behind the national average of 87 percent.

An estimated 287 lives were saved by seat belt use in Virginia in 2015, but an additional 113 deaths could have been prevented if all vehicle occupants had been buckled up, according to the U.S. Department of Transportation (US DOT).

“Most states and D.C. have a primary seat belt law for front seat occupants,” Chase said, “and their belt use rates are higher than secondary enforcement states like Virginia.”

In 2016, states with primary enforcement seat belt laws for front seat passengers had a 92 percent average belt use rate, while belt use in states with secondary enforcement laws was 83 percent, according to US DOT data.

The Virginia-based Insurance Institute for Highway Safety (IIHS) has found that when states strengthen their laws from secondary to primary enforcement, driver death rates drop by an estimated seven percent.

The theme of the 2017 roadmap report is “Have We Forgotten What Saves Lives?” Chase said that “as a safety advocate and a Virginia parent, I hope the answer to this question is a resounding ‘No.’ This failing report card should serve as a wake-up call for our state policymakers to advance the 10 basic, effective laws we’re currently lacking.”

Pugsley & Lola

Cherry Juice

Here are two photos of our daughter Sydney Bryant and her cat Cherry Juice – one when she was 3 years old and Cherry Juice was a newly adopted kitten from a barnyard litter and a recent photo of a high school grad and her loving pet. Sydney picked Cherry Juice from the many kittens in the litter and also picked his unique name. Cherry Juice passed away on Feb. 1, 2017 after 15 years of loving companionship with Sydney. They grew up together. Our family is saddened at the loss of Cherry Juice — especially his devoted owner Sydney. Rest in Peace Cherry Juice.

This is our sweet poodle Riley with our daughter, ENS Julia Van Beek just before her first deployment in October 2016. Riley was adopted as a puppy and has been with us for 14 1/2 years. My daughter has been on deployment since Oct. 14 on the USS Makin Island (LHD-8) (based out of San Diego) and she is missed by all, especially Riley, and cannot wait to have her back home safely.

Max (5) and Priss (not yet 2) are certified therapy dogs with Therapy Dogs International. I have shown Max in obedience and will be showing Priss. With the partnership of Kaiser Permanente Medical Group of Mid-Atlantic, I started a dog therapy pilot program in 2015. We visit about 20 medical centers including infusion/chemotherapy and behavioral health departments. The dogs bring humor and warmth to both members and staff. They are wonderful additions to our complete health care program.

A Very Special First Birthday at Fire Station 13

BY CAPTAIN II BILL LYNCH
STATION COMMANDER - FIRE STATION 13,
DUNN LORING

Over the weekend, firefighters from Fire Station 13, Dunn Loring, went to a very special birthday party. What made this party a little more special than most was the fact that Jim was able to attend his daughter's first birthday. In October, he went into cardiac arrest. 911 was called and Engine and Medic 13 responded. For over 25 minutes he remained without a pulse, eventually responding to cardiopulmonary treatments.

Thanks to the training and efforts of the firefighters and paramedics on B-Shift, Jim was able to celebrate his daughter's first birthday.

Jim was presented with a Fire Station 13 challenge coin and Charlotte was given a Fire Station 13 uniform patch for her baby book. 13 is definitely a lucky number for this family.

COMMUNITY

Chris Boullire welcomes fundraisers from around the area to the Wall of Hope reception, handing out awards for fundraising "champions."

A Record Year

Alzheimer's Association of the National Capital Region honors its supporters.

BY EDEN BROWN
THE CONNECTION

Megan Newman told her story at the Alzheimer's Association "Wall of Hope" reception at Tyson's Corner on Feb. 9. She was only 18, a senior in high school, when her mother started to ask the same question more than once. They both attributed it to stress. They laughed about it. A few months later, it became clear to Megan that what was wrong with her mother was more than stress. She convinced her to see a doctor, but it took many tests and many neurologists later before she was diagnosed with Alzheimer's.

It came at a difficult time for Megan, as she was headed off to college. She was supposed to be at the "best years of your life" stage. She laughs about it now, but switching roles with her parent at that point in her life was anything but funny. When she went to college, her mother went with her. When she moved off campus, she moved with her mother. The long days of caregiving, studying and managing the lives of two people took a toll on Megan. Her mother didn't really appreciate being told she had to brush her teeth or that she wasn't going to be able to drive her car any longer. Alzheimer's patients don't always exhibit a good-natured response to having children tell them what to do. Megan wasn't always patient and forbearing. And that bothered her. When it became time for her to hold down a job, Megan couldn't manage both tasks anymore. That is why she was so grateful to find the Alzheimer's Association, and why she will always give back to this organization: they helped her manage her mother and supported her, she said. The reception on Feb. 9 recognized event participants and supporters who distinguished themselves through leadership and exemplary fundraising during the year. Supporters were able to see the unveiling of new plaques on the Wall of Hope, which honors those who suffered from the disease and their friends and family who gave in their name. Attendees at the event made up 2 percent of the fundraisers and sponsors who raised over 45 percent of total funds from events. In 2016, 7,700 participants raised a record $1.78 million. And they had a good time doing it. Chris Boullire, the CEO of the National Capital Area Alzheimer's Association chapter, honored the 29 cyclists who created the "Ride to Remember," riding 100 miles and raising more than $20,000; the 260 Longest Day participants who raised over $118,000 participating in creative activities; the "Blondes v. Brunettes" (a flag football game for women,) which had 80 participants and raised over $85,173; and the biggest event for 2016 in this area: the Walk to End Alzheimer's had 7,300 participants at seven walks throughout the region who raised $1.53 million.

The Alzheimer's Association in the area is always looking for additional Walk volunteers and teams for 2017. Interested people can visit www.alznca.org/walk.

Megan Newman told the story of being a senior in high school when her mother was diagnosed.

Work Group to Examine Predatory Lending

Panel to investigate internet loans, car-title loans and open-end lines of credit.

BY MICHAEL LEE POPE
THE CONNECTION

The growing chorus of criticism about predatory lending in Virginia may not have prompted lawmakers to start passing laws to crack down on the industry. But it has accomplished one thing, formation of a work group.

"In this town, if you are in the minority party in a chamber that's two-thirds Republican, you take victories where you can," said Del. Mark Keam (D-35). "I'd like to think something good can come out of this if we can bring stakeholders together."

Lawmakers are concerned about several aspects of high-interest loans. One is the bait-and-switch nature of many of the businesses, where customers walk into a car-title business but walk out with an open-end line of credit instead. Another issue is the completely unregulated nature of open-end lines of credit, originally created for department stores but now used by car-title lenders and internet lenders. Regulators don't track them, and lenders don't need a license to offer them. Recent years have seen online lenders from around the world offer them with interest rates of up to 5,000 percent.

"If the work group doesn't deal with the open-end loans, it'll be a waste of time," said Jay Speer, executive director of the Virginia Poverty Law Center. "You can make rules about the Consumer Finance Act, and then all the internet lenders will just switch to open-end loans and it'll all just be a waste of time."

WORKING GROUPS are a common way for lawmakers to punt, essentially putting off making decisions and outsourcing solutions to a panel that makes recommendations. Sometimes the groups end up making recommendations that are adopted by the General Assembly. Recent years have seen successful working groups that made significant changes to energy policy and worker's compensation. Many lawmakers view them as an ideal way to consider difficult issues outside of the frenzied pace of the General Assembly sessions.

"There are what I believe to be plus sides to being a part-time legislature, and there are downsides to being a part-time legislature. One of the downsides is you can't keep working during one session in a short session," said Del. Peter Farrell (R-56). "Sometimes it takes a year."

For critics of predatory lending, the chief goal of the working group will be to regulate open-end lines of credit. These have become the tool of choice for car-title lenders and internet lenders to offer unlimited amounts of interest. And lawmakers don't know the scale of the problem because state regulators don't track them. That's a problem that critics say has an easy fix — require a license to offer open-end lines of credit, and make them abide by the same rules as car-title lenders or payday lenders.

Del. Peter Farrell (R-56) wanted lawmakers to force internet lenders to follow the same rules as other kinds of lenders in Virginia.

"I hope that we see a path forward for all lenders to be licensed," said Dana Wiggins, who answers the Predatory Lending Hotline at the Virginia Poverty Law Center. "If they're operating in the state of Virginia, they should all be licensed and they should all have to follow the same rules."

THE SHADOWY WORLD of internet

lending is also in the crosshairs of the work group. Some companies offer loans at interest rates from 600 percent to 5,000 percent. Some of these companies try to get around laws designed to protect consumers by claiming to have affiliations with Indian tribes, allowing them to take advantage of uncertainty surrounding a law from 1918 — long before the World Wide Web revolutionized modern American finance. Last month, Attorney General Mark Herring helped secure a $15 million settlement against a California-based company that was using a fraudulent relationship to a North Dakota tribe to evade Virginia lending laws.

"In the absence of action, the internet becomes a lawless place that plays by different rules than traditional commerce," said Kevin Mauer, associate director of the Virginia Catholic Conference. "Without protective regulation, the commonwealth's vulnerable consumers may fall prey to more and more opportunistic lenders."

IN SESSION

No More Psych Beds

Robert Johnson of Woodbridge understands the mental health crisis from a personal perspective. Back in 2011, he was struggling with a serious bout of depression and ended up handcuffed to an emergency room bed for nine hours. That's because no psychiatric beds were available in Prince William County. So he had to wait for one to be available in Fairfax.

"Think of a horse-drawn carriage, and the nearest hospital is 20 miles away and you're riding over speed bumps. That's what I'm going through emotionally. That's the kind of pain that I'm feeling handcuffed to that bed."

Johnson presented his story to lawmakers last week and asked them to support a bill introduced by Republican Del. Peter Farrell (R-56). But lobbyists for hospitals opposed the bill because they don't want lawmakers to change laws requiring hospitals to have certificates of public need, known as COPN. Farrell says he's frustrated people in need won't get help because hospitals are concerned about their bottom line.

"I don't think it has anything to do with psych beds."

I don't think they want anything at all having to do with COPN reform period," said Farrell. "I don't think they want anything to go anywhere because they don't want things to change. They enjoy having their cake and eating it too."

One silver lining, Farrell says, is that the issue will go to the Deeds Commission, which was set up after Democratic Sen. Creigh Deeds (D-25) was attacked by his son because a psychiatric bed was not available.

Ethics Reform or New Loopholes?

Should lawmakers be allowed to receive unlimited steak dinners from lobbyists at Ruth's Chris Steakhouse if they are at a meeting of the National Conference of State Legislatures? What about a three-martini lunch paid for by coal executives at a meeting of the American Legislative Exchange Council? All of that would be legal under ethics reform adopted by lawmakers this year.

"The bill says that any meal provided for attendance at such a meeting is not reportable," said state Sen. Adam Ebbin (D-30), the only senator to vote against the ethics package. "I don't see why we need more loopholes."

Some say that lawmakers are standing up for ethics reform, literally. One provision in the ethics package would allow lawmakers to receive unlimited and unrepeatable food — if it's eaten standing up. That's a provision pushed by Del. Todd Gilbert (R-15), who recounted a personal experience to justify the legislation. A few years ago, he said, he went to a lavish reception where he ate some finger food and drank some soda. Several months later, he got notification that the event was valued at several hundred dollars.

"This just is trying to clean up that whole process so that people don't get caught in unwary traps while they are standing around eating finger food and having a glass of cola or something."

The bill also allows the state to redact the home addresses of General Assembly members.
