Chairman Candidates Debate Heats Up

McLean Chamber hosts Democratic candidates' forum for Board of Supervisors Chair; vote June 11.

BY ANDREA WORKER
THE CONNECTION

Three of the four Democratic candidates seeking the top elected spot in Fairfax County met once again on May 30 at a forum hosted by the Greater McLean Chamber of Commerce at the Alden Theatre in McLean Community Center. Current Lee District Supervisor Jeff McKay, Fairfax County School Board at-large member Ryan McElveen, and Georgetown law professor Alicia Plerhoples took to the stage to express views and solutions to county-wide issues. WUSA – Channel 9's Peggy Fox served as moderator, posing questions composed by the Chamber, as well as those submitted by audience members.

The fourth Democratic challenger for Board Chair, Reston-based developer Tim Chapman, sent his regrets due to family circumstances. It was possibly Chapman's absence that kept the temperature at a simmer rather than a full-on boil such as was reached when all four met recently in a debate hosted by the Fairfax Democrats, the Democratic Business Council and the Northern Virginia Labor Federation. At that event, Chapman and McKay traded verbal punches on issues of leadership and ethics when moderator Julie Carey, NBC4 News Northern Virginia Bureau Chief, brought up an ethics complaint against McKay, alleging that the Supervisor received a discount on a home he had purchased from a developer who had business before the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors.

McKay has vehemently denied the charge, and reiterated his denial at the earlier debate, but Chapman continued to press that hot button, insisting the allegations were "very troubling."

McKay returned fire, accusing Chapman of engaging in a smear campaign with false allegations, replying that to "try and smear me because you are not winning a campaign is a Trump maneuver."

THE ALLEGED VIOLATION wasn't raised at the McLean event that focused heavily on economic and related issues that face the county. The candidates maintained a civil demeanor toward each other, though there were still some politely heated moments.

While McElveen and McKay generally used their response times to expand on each topic (with McKay providing some historical context from his perspective as a current Board member) and offer their recommendations for improvements, Plerhoples frequently included criticisms of the Board's record on many of the issues.

"Once again, we need to play catch up [to other jurisdictions like] Arlington and

The Greater McLean Chamber of Commerce hosted the democratic candidates for Chair of the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors in a debate at the McLean Community Center's Alden Theatre. D.C. on the issue of affordable housing in our area," Plerhoples said. Plerhoples accused the current Board of over-focusing on workforce housing as opposed to more affordable housing. "We need more, for all [sectors] and need more focus on preservation of existing affordable housing."

While not specifically backing this criticism, McElveen agreed that "some progress had been made," but more could be done. He favors upping the tax percentage of funds set aside for affordable housing to 2 cents per dollar of assessed property value to ward off a "greater crisis coming" and take the strain off all those affected, including younger and older county residents.

When the topic of funding for parks and public libraries was raised, Plerhoples hit back at McKay's response. McKay praised both parks and public library departments for their ability to run effective, much needed organizations on less than 1 percent of the county's entire budget, referencing that number as one way the county had fought those who sought to take funds from parks and libraries to cover other financial shortfalls or fund other priorities. McKay reminded the audience of harder times of the recent past when line items for such services often came under attack.

To this rationale, Plerhoples, who said that those public places "probably got me into Harvard" and who personally experienced housing instability during her youth, replied "if these services are so important, why do they only receive 1 percent of the budget?"

Responding to an audience question of revitalization of some more neglected areas of the county like Bailey's Crossroads, Plerhoples again took exception to McKay's answer.

McKay made the case for "balanced" redevelopment bringing "economic engines to all parts of the county." Giving examples of the work done to bring Springfield Mall and surroundings back to life, and the work being done on the Route One Corridor, McKay said that "sometimes rules had to be broken."

"We don't need to break some rules," shot back Plerhoples. "Actually we want the exact opposite in our Supervisors," she declared.

Before answering the next question concerning support of women and minority businesses as contractors to the county, McKay took the opportunity to make clear any misunderstanding of his previous reply.

Part of the "hard decision-making" of the Board's job, says McKay, is finding ways to make "squares fit in a round hole." The success of the Springfield revitalization required just that type of creativity.

"That's leadership," stated McKay.

SCHOOL BOARD MEMBER McElveen also "corrected" his opponent in a follow-up after a discussion on workforce development, taking exception when Plerhoples spoke about creating internships or other paths for area high schoolers to prepare for the jobs of the future.

McElveen pointed out that Fairfax County Public Schools already does just that, and has expanded their efforts recently by adding stipends for certain IT and related training opportunities.

"Students have a chance to learn and get paid – school-sponsored internships," he said. McElveen also mentioned other areas and partnerships that gave local students more preparation for success after high school graduation.

When Plerhoples cited that Fairfax County was on the verge of becoming a minority-majority jurisdiction and that more emphasis needed to be placed on inclusion of minorities in the governmental conversation, McElveen responded that the school system had already reached that demographic status. FCPS has a school population of more than 187,000 students; 40.7 percent of FCPS students are White, 27.4 percent are Hispanic, 20.8 percent are Asian, 10.6 percent are Black, 5.5 percent are two or more races.

The assurance of diversity and equity "and the reflection of our residents in our school staff" is already in practice, according to McElveen, and is, in fact, incorporated in the system's Strategic Plan.

McElveen also said that he is "the only candidate on this stage to have been part of developing a strategic plan tied to a budget."

There was plenty of agreement by all three on a number of issues and in declaring support for various efforts, actions and agencies, even while they differed in what to do next to protect or improve them.

The "One Fairfax" equity policy is celebrated by all the candidates. McKay called it "one of the most important, if not the most important thing I have done on the Board," referring to his role in authoring the policy. McElveen appreciates it as a "framework" from which to continue to enhance the "equity lens" by which the county's work is done. Plerhoples also applauded the adoption of the policy, but questioned how it could be effective with only one person, Chief Equity Officer Karla Bruce, charged with its implementation and enforcement.

"She needs a team and a direct line to the Chairman" for success, said Plerhoples, "and by-in from the community." She sees herself as "uniquely qualified" to build that

Lessons from the Greatest Generation

Reflections on the 75th Anniversary of D-Day.

BY SUPERVISOR JOHN C. COOK
BRADDOCK DISTRICT

Thousands of young American soldiers boarded ships in England destined for the beaches of Normandy, France 75 years ago. Allied leaders planned the first-of-its-kind invasion for months. They designated five main beaches for the attack and named them Utah, Omaha, Sword, Gold, and Juno. On the morning of June 6, 1944 high winds and rough waves made for a difficult journey to Northern France for the 5,000 ships and 11,000 airplanes carrying 150,000 Allied troops.

The weather was far from perfect for an operation, but General Dwight Eisenhower could not risk the Germans spotting the massive military presence on the coast of England. When Allied Forces landed, they were met with a barrage of fire. Nearly 2,500 Americans died in history's largest air, land, and sea invasion. Despite the treacherous terrain and heavy casualties, Allied forces broke through German lines and liberated the Gallic Coast. The pivotal victory allowed the Allies to secure the

At the Board of Supervisors meeting on Tuesday, June 4, 2019, the Board recognized the 75th anniversary of the D-Day Invasion on June 6, 1944. Included here is Rear Admiral Gene Sizemore holding the plaque and other veterans with the members of the Board.

Western Front and begin a liberation campaign towards Germany.

On the 75th anniversary of this momentous military victory, we are compelled to remember not just the heroism of the troops, but also their virtues of service of sacrifice of that generation. The harrowing actions of these servicemembers deserve the greatest respect and deepest gratitude. They showed courage, tenacity, valor, and honor in the face of incredible dangers and challenges. As Tom Brokaw eloquently put it, "They answered the call to help save the world from the two most powerful and ruthless military machines ever assembled." This anniversary should also prompt all of us to emulate the Greatest Generation's immense sense of duty and willingness to serve. Nearly every American in World War II found a way to support their nation during the conflict. Thousands of men volunteered to serve in the Armed Forces. Women supported the military in many different ways. Families nationwide planted victory gardens and volunteered for local groups that supported the war effort. Women also took industrial jobs in armament factories. In Burke, Va., residents volunteered 24/7 with the Aircraft Warning Service by staying in a watch tower to look out for enemy planes.

Today our nation faces many challenges. But a nation that could win two World Wars can also successfully meet the challenges of today. The spirit of the Greatest Generation is here to guide us.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Gun Violence As Public Health Crisis

To the Editor:

For almost 20 years I have been fighting for better gun laws in Virginia — laws to prevent the unspeakable horrors that we saw in Virginia Beach on May 31, 2019 when a gunman with two .45 caliber handguns with high-capacity magazines murdered 12 people and injured many others.

At times, I have felt like it was an exercise in futility — that I was simply banging my head against the wall. No matter how sensible the proposal introduced, it would be killed in committee by Republicans and a few rural Democrats and never even make it to the floor for a vote.

We might have 20 people testify in support of bills including victims of gun violence, law enforcement, and the medical community; yet the voice of one gun industry lobbyist opposed to the measures would be the only one that mattered.

After the shooting at Virginia Tech, there was a slow movement towards change — at least among Democrats. It was a movement that accelerated in the aftermath of the shooting at Sandy Hook Elementary School that left 26 little children and educators dead. Rural Democrats aligned with the majority in their party and started speaking out about the need for stronger laws to curtail the carnage. In fact, many Democratic candidates at even the highest levels of government began to run on the issue vowing to fight for sensible gun violence prevention measures if elected. Those Democrats won including most recently, Governor Northam, Lt. Governor, Fairfax and Attorney General Herring. And it should be no surprise. Polling tells us that as much as 90 percent of the public is in favor of stronger gun laws such as expanding background checks.

So, with the public and a Governor who clearly supports gun violence prevention measures, why can't we affect change? Because the GOP is in control of both chambers of the General Assembly and they continue to kowtow to the gun lobby instead of taking the decisive action that would make the Commonwealth safer for us all. Take the 2019 session for example. Democrats introduced dozens of firearms bills including ones to expand background checks, ban assault weapons, limit high-capacity magazines, cap handgun purchases to one a month, and to keep guns out of the hands of domestic violence abusers. Republicans defeated them all.

Gun violence has become a public health crisis in Virginia and across the country. But it is an epidemic that we know how to treat. Stronger gun laws won't prevent all senseless acts of violence but they will save lives. To get the stronger laws we deserve, we must vote for candidates who are more afraid of another horrific shooting than they are of the gun lobby and at this juncture, only the Democrats can stake that claim.

The proposals already exist. We know what needs to be done. And once Democrats are the majority party in both chambers we will finally be able to pass bills to make Virginia safer and Governor Northam will gladly sign them into law.

Why I Celebrate Eid

To the Editor:

Eid-ul-Fitr is an Islamic holiday which marks the end of the month of fasting, Ramadan. Muslims celebrate Eid by spending time with family and friends, eating good food and exchanging gifts.

I like Eid because I get a lot of presents from my family and friends and I get to wear new clothes. The prophet Muhammad (peace be upon him) told us that on Eid we should take a bath, wear new clothes or our best clothes, and wear perfume.

On Eid day I wear my new clothes and go to the mosque for Eid prayer. After the prayer I meet my friends and wish them "Eid Mubarak," which means blessed Eid. My favorite part of the day is when I open all my Eid presents, play games with my cousins and eat delicious food with my family.

Board Chair Debate Heats Up

buy-in as a person who has “experienced many of the hardships faced by our residents.”

FINDING NEW REVENUE sources for funding the county’s growing needs also produced general agreement - with divergent solutions.

McKay opposes increasing Business, Professional and Occupational (BPOL) taxes. “We’ve seen that backfire elsewhere” and doesn’t think that further “taxing of our small businesses” is the answer. He vowed to keep fighting and working with his General Assembly allies to gain for Fairfax County the same taxing flexibility that Fairfax City and our region’s towns have. The Supervisor cannot see the reasoning behind a city of some 25,000 inhabitants having greater authority over its taxing methods than the county of more than 1.1 million. “It’s ridiculous.”

Plerhoples looks at expanding the commercial tax base with more businesses, while McElveen simply stated that if more reasonable means to gain more autonomy from the State’s rule did not meet with success, “I will sue the State.”

Speaking on a topic of particular interest to the audience – overcrowding at area schools — all agreed that the School Board needed to step up and address the boundary issues that have McLean High School overburdened by its student population, while Langley High School has untapped capacity.

Even School Board member McElveen agreed with this, pointing out that only he and Jane Strauss, the Dranesville District representative on the School Board had championed the issue within the School Board’s members.

Plerhoples led the candidates’ closing statement segment, saying again that other municipalities are passing Fairfax County by and that residents are often “asked to settle for less” from their elected officials. She offered statistics that indicate 30,000 more Fairfax County residents have fallen into poverty since 2004 and that “50 percent of students [graduating] in the Lee and Mount Vernon school areas are not college-ready” yet “no one on this Board, including Jeff, have called for expanded Pre-K. This is not the type of results we should be rewarding with a promotion.”

“That’s just not true,” responded McKay in his closing. “I have seen hundreds of slots and millions of dollars added to Pre-K, particularly thorough the One Fairfax initiative.”

McKay said his record includes adding affordable housing units in Lee District, One Fairfax, support of Diversion First, land use adjustments to bring better infrastructure to underserved areas, and more.

“It’s easy to sit up here and complain. I’m here to tell you I am very proud of this county. We are nationwide leaders in a number of statistical areas. We are still a place where people want to come to live the American Dream ... that doesn’t happen by accident. It happens because you elect the right people.”

McKay said he is the one who has served the county “full time, everyday, for the last 11 years.” Acknowledging there are challenges, he says he believes in the potential of the county and feels his experience and the relationships he has built are core components of his ability to “take us to the next level.”

McElveen is “the only one who has been a countywide elected official,” and he feels that helps him best understand the needs of all of the county’s populace.

He also elicited some laughter from the audience when he acknowledged that he was not endorsed by the Washington Post (which has endorsed McKay in the Chairman’s race).

“It was a full half sentence that said Ryan McElveen is a school board member who antagonizes supervisors. I would be happy to have that etched on my tombstone,” although he says he would make one correction.

“I haven’t antagonized people, I have stood up to them, and that’s what we need in our leaders. Someone who stands up for the needs of the people in our community.” Asking for the public’s vote, McElveen promised that all in the community would have the opportunity to access the American Dream.

Equine Therapy can be used to treat those with PTSD, says Olivia Taylor of the Northern Virginia Therapeutic Riding Program.

PTSD: Recognizing and Healing

During PTSD Awareness Month, clinicians work to raise awareness, treatment options.

BY MARILYN CAMPBELL

“They took all my clothes and made me walk naked for two days so I couldn’t escape,” said one woman. “They kill people over nothing,” said another.

These are the descriptions from Latina immigrants of their experiences as they were smuggled from Mexico to the United States. These women and others like them often experience rape, assaults, and gun violence, said Carol L. Cleaveland, PhD, Associate Professor of Social Work, George Mason University.

In a recent paper, “An Exploratory Study of Latina Immigrant Trauma,” she and co-author Cara Frankenfeld, PhD, also of George Mason University, spoke with patients at Mason and Partners Clinic in Springfield, Falls Church and Manassas Park who described events that often left them with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). During June, which is PTSD Awareness Month, mental health professionals are working to raise public awareness of the disorder and a knowledge of the treatments available to those who suffer.

There is often a lack of understanding which makes it difficult to identify said Cleaveland. “PTSD is a shift in how people think, feel and behave in response to a traumatic event they experience. It’s something that induces profound terror,” she said.

“[Symptoms include] intrusive thoughts and memories of the traumatic event, such as thinking about the event when you don’t want to, having flashbacks or having a strong emotional reaction to a something that reminds you of the trauma,” said Joanne Bagshaw, PhD, Professor of Psychology at Montgomery College.

A person experiencing PTSD might avoid people or experiences that remind them of the trauma, said Bagshaw. “You [can experience] negative thinking about yourself and the world, such as having traumatic expectations or detaching from relationships.”

Managing and healing even severe symptoms is possible with the right strategies. “There are several very good treatments for trauma,” said Bagshaw.

Among these healing methods is Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT), a form of psychotherapy that teaches how to cope with dysfunctional emotions, behaviors, and thoughts. Another therapy is Eye Movement Desensitization Reprocessing (EMDR) which involves a patient briefly focusing on the traumatic memory under the guidance of a trained clinician and ultimately experiencing relief.

“There is research which shows EMDR is highly effective in desensitizing the trauma,” says Cleaveland.

Therapeutic riding is an emerging therapy that has not been studied extensively for PTSD. “[It] is teaching people to ride and work with horses with the goal of improving their physical or mental well-being,” said Olivia Taylor, Program Director of Northern Virginia Therapeutic Riding Program (NVTRP). “One of the biggest benefits we see for our riders with PTSD is that riding puts them in the moment, focused on creating a bond with their horse. They’re not thinking about past events or being hypervigilant, but feeling peaceful in the moment.”

For those who have strained interpersonal skills related to trauma, such as the ability to trust others, therapeutic riding provides a safe space for working on that proficiency, Taylor said. “Horses are empathetic, non-judgmental creatures, so therapeutic riding provides a great opportunity to work on building a trusting relationship with another living being,” she said.

As an example, Taylor points to one NVTRP rider who suffers from debilitating and life-disrupting anxiety resulting from PTSD. “Over several weeks of riding, she has developed a very strong bond with the horse she rides,” says Taylor. “They share an especially close relationship, and she credits the trust she has in him with her ability to overcome her fears of riding and progress more than she’d ever imagined. We find that this sort of trust and openness to an empathetic relationship carries over into riders’ lives beyond the farm, helping them to rebuild healthy lives.”

Live Music: Lily Neill & Clive Carroll

Harpist Lily Neill and guitarist Clive Carroll make their debut concert as a duo at Jammin Java. Between them, harpist Lily Neill and guitarist Clive Carroll have performed around the world, from North America to the Far East and everywhere in between. Primarily known as soloists, their musical union extends from their love of a vast array of musical styles—from eat-your-heart-out blues, to fiery dances from Eastern Europe, beguiling Irish airs, jaunty Ragtime numbers, and Elizabethan lute classics. To their duo they bring all the intensity of their solo performances and more, conjuring a genre-bending orchestra from two modest plucked-string instruments. Wednesday, June 19, 7:30 p.m. at Jammin Java, 227 Maple Ave. E., Vienna. $20-$25. Visit www.jamminjava.com.

Photographer Robin Kent discusses his work in the Upper Gallery at St. John's Episcopal Church in McLean.

St. John's Church Hosts Art Show, Open House

On May 19, St. John's Episcopal Church invited the public to an exhibit of landscape photography and to view recently completed interior and exterior renovations. The Art Show and Open House, organized by St. John's Education and Community Life Committees, brought together parishioners, neighbors, local artists and long-time church members who returned for the event.

Renowned local photographer Robin Kent shared more than 25 images, including views at National Parks, the Great Falls and the Chesapeake Bay. "Blue Ridge Parkway, North Carolina" features the Milky Way; "Star Trails, Sonora Pass" is a combination of 30 images, each shot for more than 4 minutes.

Recent improvements to the St. John's interior include a two-story entrance foyer overlooked by a second-floor balcony. The regraded exterior drive has a water-permeable surface, and new walkways give better access from the parking lot to the front entrance. The outdoor Woodland Chapel, partially encircled by the new Columbarium, provides an alternative worship space with permanent seating.

Originally a rural Sunday School located near what is now the CIA, St. John's has been a fixture of the McLean community since 1866. The "Church on the Hill" has been at its current site since 1956.

The summer session kicks off in June at the Capitol Building in Washington, D.C., with an overview of women in elected office.

'Young Women Leadership Program'
Now Accepting Applications

The Summer 2019 session of the "Young Women's Leadership Program," founded and led by former Virginia Congresswoman Barbara Comstock, is accepting applications from middle and high school girls. There is no charge to participate.

Nearly 2,000 young women from across the country have participated in the six-year-old, non-partisan program that introduces them to women in leadership positions in government, technology, philanthropy, business, and other fields.^{oo}

The application deadline is June 18, 2019. Applications may be made at <https://comstockleadership.gmu.edu/apply-now/>

This is the first year the "Young Women Leadership Program" has been hosted at the Schar School of Policy and Government at George Mason University. Comstock, who represented Virginia's 10th District for two terms, created the program when she was a member of the Virginia House of Delegates as a way to give young women opportunities to meet women in established leadership positions. "If you can see it, you can be it," Comstock said of the idea behind the program.

"The Schar School is proud to now host this successful program that inspires young women to become future leaders in the Commonwealth and the nation," said Schar School Dean Mark J. Rozell.

"This non-partisan, career-oriented program is designed to teach young women about leadership and the wide range of careers they may pursue in government or the private sector," said Comstock.^{oo} "I am thrilled that we can continue this program that we started six years ago and continue to inspire the next generation of female leaders to bring their intelligence, drive, and solutions to their chosen professions."

Comstock said the summer session kicks off in June at the Capitol Building in Washington, D.C., with an overview of women in elected office. Throughout the summer, the participants will have opportunities to participate in six to eight seminars that will introduce them to women leaders in a variety of careers in the public and private sectors.

For more information about the program, see the website at comstockleadership.gmu.edu.^{ooo}

For those interested in donating to this non-profit program, see the website at: comstockleadership.gmu.edu/donate.^o

From Weak To Week

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

For the next six weeks or so until mid-July when my bi-monthly CT scan reminder arrives in my inbox, I am on easy street/living the life of Riley. The email will confirm time and place when scans – and face-to-face appointments with my oncologist, are scheduled. Reminders which I really don't need.

I mean, my life is at stake here. What kind of moron ("Why? Are there more than one kind?" to quote Curly Howard of The Three Stooges.) forgets/neglects medical appointments related to one's life when death is looming?

And death for me has been looming since late February 2009. That's when an (now my) oncologist dropped the figurative hammer on Team Lourie after a nearly two-month pursuit to determine the truth for just us: "Non-small cell lung cancer, stage IV," with a "13-month-to-two-year" prognosis.

Talk about devastating news. To say we were all stunned does a disservice to the word "stunned."

To invoke Yoda from "Star Wars," speechless we were.

That was a long time ago, however, and much has occurred. The details of which are somewhere between being lost in the ether and lodged in my brain, generally retrievable should the need arise. A need which I often have when writing this column but one which doesn't manifest itself too much in my daily activities.

Yes, I have cancer, but I try not to make a big or central thing about it. To say, "It is what it is" isn't meant to trivialize the overwhelming nature of a "terminal diagnosis," it's more an attempt to compartmentalize it somehow. (I just hope the compartment has an infinite amount of space. Otherwise, I fear I'll be in trouble fairly soon.)

But not for the next six weeks. For the next six weeks, I am on cruise control. I will be going about my regular business without too much emotional interference.

I wouldn't exactly say I'm on cruise-control/"passenger" in a self-driving car, but I am able to function without consulting the manual.

This "honeymoon" is as good as it gets for a patient whose life is lived from one diagnostic scan to the next, not knowing, generally, if the you-know-what has hit the fan. It's the sword of Damocles on steroids.

But what else is new?

For a cancer patient? Not much.

This is the life, a life which for us fortunate few, we have to live, despite the initial words to the contrary spoken by our respective oncologists – who were consulting the manual: If patient "X" presents with such and such then his/her prognosis is so-so.

Just last week, my oncologist told me the average life expectancy "for lung cancer patients is one year." And even though I've lived an unexpected life – and met many others who likewise have lived beyond expectations, his assessment of my fellow lung cancer "diagnoses" was still horrifying. (Why not me? I think there's been a misspelling somewhere.)

Misspelling or not, I'll go on pretending life in the cancer lane, as bumpy and in as need of repair as any you can imagine – or have read about in this space, goes on without further adieu, so to speak.

My philosophy has been: "Until they tell me otherwise, and even if they do ... " I have tried, and hope I will continue to try, especially if the future news is not so good, to not become a victim of my own circumstances. And though I have occasionally received some discouraging news, I have tried not to give in to it.

"It's nothing until it's something and even if it's something, it's still could be nothing." That's how I roll.

For the past 10 years plus, I've rolled along managing the "slings and arrows" of my outrageous misfortune: a life-long non-smoker with no immediate family history of cancer diagnosed with an incurable form of lung cancer.

Lucky me. You bet I am.

Alive and reasonably well a decade after the hammer came down.

Oak Marr Farmers Market Offers Nutritious Foods, a Friendly Community

Farmers market is a weekly hub for local farmers and businesses to connect with the community.

THE CONNECTION

Farmers markets are the perfect place to find a variety of healthy foods and produce. One of the first good qualities of a farmers market that a shopper would notice while visiting the weekly market hosted by Oak Marr Recreation Center every Wednesday is a sense of support for local business as well as welcoming friendliness. Many of the booths are occupied by long time returners. Wanda Catlett, who has operated J&W Valley View Farm since 1992, explains her favorite parts about being a vendor: "Meeting new people and we are proud to have our product out here... we worked so hard to get it all here and then we have our regulars that trust us to grow good crop." Catlett runs her booth with the help of her grandson whom she hopes to one day take over the family business from farming to selling.

Farmers markets are regular destinations for many local people to find organic and trustworthy food that is served with a smile by helpful and knowledgeable vendors.

For families like Dessie, Roux and Daniel Berry, the Oak Marr farmers market is a weekly stop for nutritious, unprocessed and better tasting food. "I love supporting the local farmers and I know that it's fresh, within a couple hours of the city," said Roux Berry. The Berry family enjoys meeting new people as well as the homemade popsicles and ice cream for their daughter. There are also other organizations that have booths at Oak Marrs farmers market such as pro-choice and free speech. Farmers markets have more to offer than just fresh produce though, also included in the line up is an Egyptian style falafel stand, a bakery, and The Fermented Pig; a homemade kombucha and fresh meats stand which has been in business for less than a year. "The pork we get comes mostly from a co-op in central Virginia... as well as local Mangalitsa hogs for pancetta," said Kaye Stansbury, the booth operator.

Mary Kay Clause, the market manager has nothing but praise for the vendors that come every year, noting their hard work and commitment to the yearly market and above all the community that they have created over the course of its existence. "What I really like about our market is that because they have all worked together for nearly 10 years there is a lot of collaboration and they all play well together," said Clause.
