NEWS Generation Gap

Millennials and Gen X now outnumber older voters, but Baby Boomers continue to dominate.

By Michael Lee Pope The Connection

illennials and Gen Xers now out number Baby Boomers and older voters in Virginia, according to data from the Census Bureau. But that doesn't mean they have as much influence. Census numbers also show another trend: People over the age of 45 vote at much higher rates. That means Baby Boomers are expected to once again exert outsized influence in next week's election despite the fact that they are now outnumbered by ranks of younger voters.

"We talk about the Baby Boomers so much because they were a phenomenon unto themselves in some ways," says Quentin Kidd, director of the Wason Center for Public Policy at Christopher Newport University. "As they aged, they participated at high levels, and those participation levels stayed pretty high."

Voters across Virginia will be heading to the polls next week in a high-stakes election that will determine which party controls the House of Delegates and state Senate. All 140 seats in the House and Senate will be on the ballot this year. Election officials expect turnout to be about 30 percent, much lower than the 60 percent of registered voters that show up to presidential elections. That means voters who show up to the polls will be older, whiter and much more likely to be Republican.

"Virginia has a lot of immigrants. Immigrants tend to be younger and tend to have more kids, and those voters with that profile tend to lean Democratic," says Jeremy Mayer, associate professor in the Schar School of Policy and Government at George Mason University. "So why are the Baby Boomers still dominating? Because that demographic votes, and tends to vote with extraordinary reliability."

Mayer says he sees a similarity between the victory of Donald Trump in 2016 with a victory of Brexit that same year, two elections where the interest of older voters overwhelmed the interest of younger voters, a phenomenon he calls a "revolution of the elderly." This election is also expected to be dominated by Baby Boom voters, although eventually millennials and Gen X voters will catch up and become the dominant force in Virginia politics.

ment are indeed the 18 to 29 year olds," says Bob Denton, chairman of the Department of Communications at Virginia Tech. "There is going to be a political sea change, not so much on demographics per se but on political beliefs, attitudes and values of the Millennials and Generation Z."

Four years ago, when Virginia had no statewide races and every member of the General Assembly was up for election, about 30 percent of registered voters showed up to the polls and cast a ballot. Turnout statistics were pretty much the same for the election four years before that as well as the election four years before that. Democrats are expected to do well if they can push the turnout numbers above 30 percent,

"The early voting numbers suggest a significantly higher trajectory," says Stephen Farnsworth, director of the Center for Leadership and Media Studies at the University of Mary Washington. "Based on the number of candidates running in the Virginia mid-term this year as well as polls, including the Mary Washington statewide survey that shows a high level of voter interest in 2019, all indications are that this Virginia midterm will have much higher turnout than four years ago."

The Kena Highlanders preformed typical Scottish songs on their bagpipes. Vienna's Night of Tradition and Fun

t is that time of year again when the leaves start to change and there's a crisp air that smells like cinnamon apples. But this year was a little bit different. As many wolves, supermen, and witches were walking the streets of Vienna, there were also as many mini Nationals players hooting and hollering as the Washington Nationals made their way to the World Series. Atop the Evolution Fitness float there were kids adorning Nats uniforms riding exercise bicycles and Nats hats and jerseys were an addition to many costumes. Even as the home team was making their way to the plate, Vienna residents still showed up in their Halloween best to celebrate an event that is more than 70 years old. Carey Sienicki served as Grand Marshall and announced Vienna businesses and associations as they passed the Town Green on Maple Avenue. As the Nationals won their second World Series game, Vienna was doing what it does best: bringing together its people for a night of tradition and fun in the town's Halloween Parade.

Grand Canyon Antics Oakton High School takes audiences downriver for their first Fall performance of 'Men on Boats.'

By Charlie Williams Oakton High Student

tick around Oakton High School some time, long after the last bus has left and even the after-school clubs are letting out. Walk down the hall from door 5 — nice place, isn't it? Take it all in. Soon the new renovation construction will end, and...

Wait. Did a one-armed woman wearing 1800s explorer clothes just run past?

If so, that was probably Madison Shannon, on her way to after-school rehearsals for the first play kicking off Oakton's season. "Men on Boats" is the story of Ten explorers. Four Boats. One Grand Canyon. It tells the true(ish) history of John Wesley Powell's expedition down the Colorado River. Playwright Jaclyn Backhaus has written the play with an all female cast, something rarely seen on stage these days. "Powell is so complex," says Shannon. "When I first read for him, I was interested, but unable to connect with a deeper level of his emotions. I couldn't find more than the inspiring leader. I've had to spend so much of rehearsals debating with myself and my directors about him and how he is, and my image of him has slowly but surely developed."

SHANNON had a strong answer for questions surrounding the all-female cast. "To know we're telling the story of history that women weren't allowed to make is so challenging but special. We want to properly get across the stories of these men and the expedition they went on. It's a matter of exhibiting women's power whilst exhibiting the men we play."

On her lack of a second arm, Shannon says, "I've had to push myself physically. I knew if I was in 'Men On Boats,' no matter what role I got, I would have to be very active and have good endurance to make the show believable. But Powell only has one arm, so the physical scenes are two times harder than they would've been."

Other actresses have felt similar challenges in their roles, and have striven to overcome them. "There's certainly a disparity between "I'm a 16 year old girl from 2019 and wouldn't last 10 minutes outside" and "I'm a 29 year old man in the 1880s and could kill a bear with a piece of twine and See Oakton High, Page 9 a button," says junior Anna Kruse, who plays adventurer John Colton Sumner. "It's also a side of acting I'm personally not used to because instead of having fun making up a backstory for a fictional character, I have to check the Wiki before making any sort of large character choice and try to stay true to the source material."

John Powell is also aided on his expedition by a right-hand-man, portrayed by Oakton senior Beckv Woolf. "I play William Dunn, who is a hunter/trapper/innovator. He acts as the unofficial second-incommand (although he thinks he knows better than the CO)."

When asked what the most meaningful part of the creation of the show has been for her, Woolf replied, "Definitely getting to bond with the cast. We only have sixteen students acting/directing 'Men on Boats,' so we have gotten to spend a lot of quality time together."

THE UNYIELDING student dedication to the show goes beyond the main stage. In the technical theatre crew, Katelyn Marshall's team is working every day to make the main set all it can be. On designing the set, she mused, "Our greatest challenges were size and realism; it's nearly impossible to replicate something like the Grand Canyon, both because of its scale and natural beauty. Our crew is working hard to take advantage of the perception of the audience, and to create set pieces that imitate the colors and shape of the canyon's interior."

One of "Men on Boats's" immensely talented directors, Camila Martinez, has the closing words. "What I want audiences to look forward to when they see MOB is definitely the boat scenes. Everything is very physical, imaginative, and engaging. They should also look forward to the music that helps capture the image of these 'men' on the rapids."

You don't have to take her word for it. "Men on Boats" is hitting the Oakton theater early this November.

"Underwhere" and What

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

Though I don't think I've broken any laws, other than the laws of consumerism, I may have gone over to the dark side. And by 'dark side,' I refer to two elements, one way more significant than the other, both of which I will get to in short order. In the interim, I refer to that most private of previously public purchases: underwear.

The last two times I bought underwear, I did not, as my father before me did so regularly for his two sons: buy from a local distributor. No. I didn't brick and mortar, I did not drive to and from. And neither did I engage with a living being (so far as I know, anyhow). Rather, I simply typed, mouse-clicked and purchased online from a national distributor. And since I wasn't able to touch and feel, my selection was a bit of a leap of faith. Would the fit, style and look satisfy in person much as is it had done so online? So far, after having introduced a dozen pairs to their new homes, their owner and his neighbors seem okay with the interlopers. I expect that with the passage of time, the familiarity of it all will wear down any anticipated objections. Still, I imagine there will be an adjustment period.

Those purchases being made, I do feel as if I've crossed a line of sorts. [And the editor is likely to agree and assert selective deletion.] At the very least, consumers and their underwear purchases - and processes, seemed sacrosank and immune to the lure of the internet. Granted, its presumptive privacy and seemingly endless choices/supply would presumably appeal to one's sense of curiosity. But not having the opportunity to physically pick and choose, and then grab and go to the cashier while glancing at the assorted inventory while you saunter through the department now seems like a lost art. An art that will never again be bid on, certainly not at Christie's anyway. I don't feel guilty exactly, about what I've done, but I do feel as if struck at the very foundation of the consumer's code of decency.

I mean, if one is going to buy underwear online then there really is no stopping the internet's intrusion into our daily lives. And if the artificial intelligence running the sites knows about our most personal preferences, then what's preventing a mass outing of mankind and womankind? To that possible end, I am now going to mention the second element of my recent purchase for which you likewise might have an opinion. This time I have literally gone over the dark side: colors; blue, black, green and gray. The tidy whities of my youth and nearly entire adulthood have had to give way to color. Another break with my underwear past which also seems unforgivable. My father always wore white underwear. How could I, as his son, break with such familial tradition? This is the weight I am now carrying. I'm not exactly leaving the faith but I do feel that I'm definitely disconnecting

And since these online purchases of nonwhite underwear are not that recent (six months or so), recently, as in the last month, I have given consideration to yet another total break to how/where I've purchase these non-white "underwears," brand. I have heard multiple radio advertisements on my satellite radio concerning an upscale brand of underwear which has given me pause to rethink how I might further upgrade the neighborhood where my underwear has been residing.

It's been difficult enough changing how I buy my underwear, and then transitioning from whites to colors, but now possibly changing brands just for the sake of some creature comforts? I haven't heard any complaints from the neighbors so why bother? To be cool and comfortable? I thought I was. Apparently not. Dare I break yet another decades-old tradition? It may be too much.

News Lundegards Honored at Colvin Run Mill

Historic site barn renamed after Bob and Marjorie Lundegard.

By Olivia Anello The Connection

riends and staff of the Colvin Run Mill gathered at the historic site in Great Falls on Saturday morning to honor Bob and Marjorie Lundegard with the renaming of a barn on the property. Bob Lundegard died in May of this year and many of the speakers reflected on what an impressive man he was, and the unstoppable team he and Marge made with many of those around them.

Many remarked on how fitting it was to dedicate the Marjorie and Bob Lundegard Education Center to the couple, because the Lundegards dedicated much of their lives to preserving, restoring, and advocating for the mill and cultural preservation. It all began in 1989, when Marjorie, a former teacher, started volunteering at the Colvin Run Mill and taught visiting school-children about mills and simple machines. Bob followed shortly after and began volunteering for the mill in his retirement in 1993. The two became invested in the mill and ended up being some of the first members of the Friends of Colvin Run Mill organization. According to Mike Henry, Manager of the Colvin Run Mill Historic Site, Marjorie Mill. Their son, Paul Lundegard, shared that his parents' love and passion for preserving mills "brought them all over the country to other historic mill sites and into the arms of genuine friends, some of whom are even here with us [at the ceremony]." Paul commended his father for looking toward the future and always creating strategies to achieve his goals. He joked that if his father were here, he would say the renaming of the barn "is a lovely thing … But what can we do next? We're not done yet."

Cindy Walsh, the Director of Park Services for the Fairfax County Park Authority, helped conclude the ceremony.
