Democrats Decide

Voters to determine direction of party in June 8 primary.

BY MICHAEL LEE POPE
THE CONNECTION

The June 8 primary will determine the direction of the Democratic Party in Virginia at a critical time, when the commonwealth is emerging from the pandemic and trying to recast itself as something other than a party in opposition to former President Donald Trump. Opposition to the former president helped Democrats claim the trifecta — all three statewide offices, the House of Delegates and the state Senate. Now they'll be facing a Republican ticket that has racial diversity, gender diversity and geographic diversity.

"We have the momentum, energy, and grassroots organization to send good, solid Republicans to Richmond," said Rich Anderson, chairman of the Republican Party of Virginia. "And we're going to fight harder than ever to ensure we do just that."

Democrats head into Election Day likely to nominate white males from Northern Virginia as governor and attorney general, while the election for lieutenant governor remains wide open. Voters could end up selecting a Democratic ticket that is three white males from Northern Virginia. That's one of the reasons why Gov. Ralph Northam attempted to tip the scales by endorsing Del. Hala Ayala (D-51) for Lieutenant Governor, a Democrat from Prince William County who identifies as an Afro-Latina-Lebanese-Irish woman. Campaign finance records show she's struggled to raise as much money as Del. Sam Rasoul (D-11) or Del. Mark Levine (D-45).

"Establishment Democrats clearly think that Hala Ayala is going to be the better candidate in the general election," said Quentin Kidd, a political science professor at Christopher Newport University. "But that doesn't mean that she would be, and that doesn't mean that she'll win the Democratic primary."

AT THE TOP of the ticket is the race for governor. Former Gov. Terry McAuliffe has an outsized lead in the polls and the fundraising, although it's extremely rare for a former governor to decide to seek a non-consecutive term. It hasn't been done since 1973, when former Gov. Mills Godwin was elected to a second non-consecutive term after a four-year absence from the Executive Mansion. In his first term, Godwin was a Democrat. But eight years later, he switched parties and became a Republican during a time when both parties were experiencing an identity crisis.

"I was moved to run [again] because I love this state," Godwin said in 1973 during a campaign speech in Southwest Virginia. "And I don't want the liberal left to take over stop," said Del. Kathy Tran (D-42). "As a delegate, I've seen the difference between legislators who lead when the going gets tough and those who don't. Jenn McClellan is a leader who lifts up all Virginians."

THE RACE FOR lieutenant governor is the race that will determine the missing third of the statewide Democratic ticket. Sam Rasoul has raised and spent more money than any other candidate, a notable achievement considering he refuses to take money from special interest PACs or lobbyists. During a televised debate on WJLA last week, anchor Dave Lucas asked if Rasoul believed he could represent Virginians of all faiths. The televised question caused a firestorm because Rasoul is Muslim, and the question employed anti-Muslim tropes.

"Sadly, this isn't what Virginians are wanting to hear about," said Rasoul. "They're wanting to hear about how we're going to improve access to their health care, about broadband issues, how we are going to safely get kids back in school."

WJLA eventually apologized, calling the question "inappropriate and disrespectful." Meanwhile, Rasoul picked up new endorsements and gained a ton of free publicity. But he wasn't the only candidate to seize on a moment from the WJLA debate. When the candidates were asked if critical race theory should be taught in Virginia classrooms, former Fairfax NAACP president Sean Perryman seized the moment to explain that the law-school concept wasn't being taught in K-12 classrooms.

"Critical race theory is not even being taught in our schools," said Perryman. "It's a Republican dog whistle where anything they disagree with is critical race theory."

ATTORNEY GENERAL Mark Herring is the only statewide incumbent seeking reelection. He's being challenged by Del. Jay Jones (D-89). Herring was the town attorney in Lovettsville and served on the Loudoun County Board of Supervisors before being elected to the state Senate in a 2006 special election after Attorney General Bob McDonnell appointed Sen. Bill Mims (R-33) chief deputy attorney general.

Herring was elected attorney general in 2013, and he's now seeking a third term in office. During his time as attorney general, he created a new Office of Civil Rights as well as a new conviction integrity unit and a new worker protection unit while also reorganizing the consumer protection section. He opposed Virginia's ban on gay marriage, fought against Trump's Muslim ban, and overruled Republican gerrymandering in the United States Supreme Court.

"I've transformed the job into a progressive powerhouse," said Herring. "I have proven that I can win even the biggest fights."

Jones was first elected in 2017, part of the first Democratic wave that began the transformation of the House of Delegates. Since that time, he's been seen as a rising star in the party. Jones says it's time to hand the office to the next generation, and as an African-American man he says he would be able to bring his lived experience into conversations about criminal justice reform and equity. During a televised debate, he avoided answering questions about a bill he introduced that would have allowed predatory lenders to charge 350 percent interest — a point of distinction that provides contrast with Herring, who worked with lawmakers to pass the Fairness in Lending Act. Jones never withdrew his bill which died in committee, although he ended up voting for the bill that Herring supported.

"The attorney general knows that he and I supported the exact same bill," said Jones. "I was happy to work with Delegate Bagby, the chair of the Legislative Black Caucus, who has endorsed my campaign."

Principle Above Partisanship

BY KENNETH R. "KEN" PLUM
STATE DELEGATE (D-36)

COMMENTARY

Virginia lost two of its finest citizens last week: former United States Senator John Warner who died at age 94 and former member of the Virginia House of Delegates Dick Hobson who died at 89 years old. Both were heavily engaged in partisan politics—Warner as a Republican and Hobson as a Democrat. Both may have been best known, however, for the times they rose above their party labels to assert principles over partisanship.

Senator John Warner had the dignified look and the resounding voice of a person in power. He had a very admirable career in the U.S. military in both the Navy and the Marines and served later in civilian life as Secretary of the Navy. For more than 30 years he served in the United States Senate where he was a recognized expert in military affairs. He was elected to represent the Commonwealth at a time when Southern Democrats dominated politics in the state. Some attribute his first election to his second wife, Elizabeth Taylor, but he continued to be elected after their divorce based on his unassailable performance in office.

My dealings with Senator Warner were never very direct, but as a member of the Northern Virginia delegation I recognized, as did the Democratic majority in the General Assembly and Democratic governors, that Senator Warner was the go-to person on Capitol Hill if the state needed federal assistance.

Mark Warner took on John Warner in an election of "Mark not John" but was unsuccessful. Mark had to wait for John's retirement before winning the seat with Senator Warner's endorsement. Senator Warner, the Republican, was known in his retirement days for endorsing Democrats for president including Barack Obama, Hillary Clinton and Joe Biden. He loved the Senate and his country, and he never let partisanship get ahead of that loyalty.

Delegate Richard "Dick" Hobson served in the Virginia House of Delegates for two terms retiring in 1979. He was in his second and final term when I first came to the House of Delegates in 1978. I felt a particular kinship to him because both of us coming from Northern Virginia as progressive Democrats felt ourselves at odds with many of the politics and priorities of the more conservative Democrats who dominated the House. A key element of the then-declining "Byrd Machine" that dominated Virginia politics for decades was the role of circuit court judges in keeping the machine in power. As a progressive freshman in the House, I planned to change that political abuse that was a violation of the separation of powers. Dick Hobson was the only other delegate who was willing to sign as a copatron on my bill to provide for the merit selection of judges. He went with me to provide moral support for my first appearance before the powerful Rules Committee that defeated my bill within minutes as not having merit.

Like John Warner, Dick Hobson put principles of democracy and good government ahead of partisanship, and Virginia is better for the leadership of both of them!

Fighting Both anti-Semitism and Oppression

BY LEAH HARRIS

TAKING EXCEPTION

On the May 13 Eid holiday, Abrar Omeish, at-large member of the Fairfax County School Board, Tweeted: "Hurts my heart to celebrate while Israel kills Palestinians & desecrates the Holy Land right now," she wrote. "Apartheid & colonization were wrong yesterday and will be today, here and there. May justice + truth prevail."

There has been a disturbing community backlash in response. A spokesperson for the Fairfax GOP smeared her as "deeply anti-Semitic." And on May 19 the Jewish Community Relations Council (JCRC) of Greater Washington rescinded its plans to honor Ms. Omeish due to the content of her Tweet. JCRC's announcement shames and punishes Ms. Omeish for her views, saying that she "disenfranchised the thousands of Jewish families in her district."

As the Jewish parent of a child in FCPS, JCRC does not speak for me. By conflating the state of Israel with all Jewish people everywhere, groups like JCRC and the Fairfax GOP are engaging in a well-worn tactic: to paint any critique of Israeli state violence as an expression of anti-Semitism. Such allegations are designed to "cancel" anyone who speaks out for Palestinian human rights, and to deflect from the actual substance of their criticism.

For example, Ms. Omeish's use of the word "apartheid" in her Tweet is completely aligned with the assessment of the Israeli human rights group B'tselem, which wrote in a recent report: "The Israeli regime enacts in all the territory it controls (Israeli sovereign territory, East Jerusalem, the West Bank, and the Gaza Strip) an apartheid regime. One organizing principle lies at the base of a wide array of Israeli policies: advancing and perpetuating the supremacy of one group – Jews – over another – Palestinians." Human Rights Watch also agrees that Israel's policies amount to apartheid. And Israel is currently under a U.N. inquiry for possible war crimes following its latest offensive on Gaza, which left 67 Palestinian children dead.

Ms. Omeish's detractors allege that by criticizing Israel, she cannot represent all students. I strongly reject this destructive reasoning, as well as simplistic "you're either with us or against us" arguments. As she herself reiterated in her speech at the May 20 meeting of the Fairfax County School Board, it is possible to "fight both anti-Semitism and oppression against the Palestinians ... at the same time."

I am deeply concerned by the insinuation of some community members and groups that School Board members should remain silent on matters of social injustice. In the words of Archbishop Desmond Tutu, who led the resistance to apartheid in South Africa: "If you are neutral in situations of injustice, you have chosen the side of the oppressor."

My family couldn't be prouder to have Ms. Omeish representing us on the School Board. She has continued to express a good-faith commitment to work with all faith leaders to improve the well-being of all students in Fairfax County. I can't say the same for those trying to discredit her and suppress healthy discussion.

Meeting on Striping Changes in Hunter Mill, Providence and Dranesville Districts

The Fairfax County Department of Transportation (FCDOT) will host a virtual meeting on additional striping changes proposed for the Hunter Mill, Providence and Dranesville Districts as part of the 2021 Paving and Restriping Program. The meeting will be held in coordination with the Virginia Department of Transportation on Tuesday, June 8, 2021 at 6.30 p.m.

I Became a Better Mother When I Stopped Trying To Do It All Myself

BY MEGAN MANCILLAS

Nearly five years ago, when my ex-husband and I separated, I felt the same way I suspect a lot of mothers do. I thought our children should live with me full-time, not only because I gave birth to them, but also because I had been their primary caretaker for most of their lives.

After staying home with them for over 12 years, it felt like an insult for my ex to then ask for them half of the time — after all, I felt I had made sacrifices to stay home so they wouldn't be in the care of strangers. I came up with all of the usual excuses: Who will do their hair? He's working full-time, how will he get them to and from school on time? My youngest is only four, she shouldn't be away from her mother for so long!

Still, in an effort to avoid the adversarial and expensive court route, I sat down and looked at his proposed schedule on paper, followed by reading every article or study I could get my hands on regarding shared parenting. The evidence was overwhelming.

Across the board, children have better

Across the board, children have better outcomes when their parents have a shared parenting schedule, even in high-conflict cases.

outcomes when their parents have a shared parenting schedule, even in high-conflict cases.

My “come to Jesus” moment happened when I admitted to myself that all of my objections to shared parenting were based on my own fears. It wasn't that they didn't love their dad or that he wasn't a good father — he was. It was more that I had been a stay at home mother for twelve years, and it had almost become my identity.

I was afraid of the loss of control, particularly in the middle of a divorce, when you feel as though nothing is controllable. I was afraid of who I would become if my children were gone half the time — it felt like a lot of responsibility to suddenly be forced to figure out what to do with my time when they weren't there. I was afraid of other peoples' expectations of me.

I was afraid to go back to school and re-enter the workforce. And even though my plan was always to go back to school once my youngest was in kindergarten, I now felt immense pressure to provide.

Despite knowing that there was all this scientific evidence that pointed to shared parenting being best for children, agreeing to it still didn't feel easy. It was a choice to release all of my fears and expectations and take the first step without seeing the whole staircase. I was not confident, but it was what I had to do, and little did I know, that one choice would set the tone for all of my other life choices moving forward.

As an added bonus, the very thing that was proven to be best for my kids also ended up being personally liberating for me.

I went back to school. I started volunteering. I had a social life. I found a job I enjoyed. I became a better mother, because I wasn't trying to do it all myself. The time I spent with my kids became even more precious; I was less stressed, less tired, more attentive, and more in tune with their needs.

Although my divorce was contentious, it was a first step toward re-building trust, toward working together as a team, and toward giving our children all the benefits of living with both parents. It was a quicker path to less animosity, less discord, and less resentment; not just because of the circumstances surrounding the divorce, but because we were now both sharing the responsibility of raising our children.

Nearly five years later, my children are thriving. They got through our divorce relatively unscathed, which is something I know we're both really proud of. And guess what? My ex-husband learned how to do their hair.

Fairfax Dems Clash with Supervisors

Demand firing of FCPD Chief Kevin Davis.

BY MERCIA HOBSON
THE CONNECTION

The Fairfax County Democratic Committee (FCDC) called on the Board of Supervisors ("Board") on May 25 to terminate Kevin Davis's employment as Chief of the Fairfax County Police Department. In its three-point Resolution, FCDC called on the ten-member Board, nine of whom are Democrats, to reopen the search for a new chief and implement a transparent hiring process. FCDC advocated that the Board use a "racial equity decision-making framework and a community screening committee comparable to the one used in Fairfax County's 2013 police chief search."

"The mission of the Fairfax County Democratic Committee, with over 1,000 members and an even larger network of volunteers is to advance and maintain the election of Democrats to public office here," said FCDC Chair Bryan Graham at a Press Conference the day after the Resolution's release.

"We have worked hard to elect the nine Democrats to the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors... But it is also our responsibility as the party to promote Democratic values," Graham said.

THE BOARD appointed Davis on April 23, and he assumed the position on May 3. According to FCDC's Resolution, Davis was afforded the opportunity to address concerns about policing incidents in his career on May 6, [at the County's Community Input Session]. He did not. Instead, Davis "diverted" in his explanations.

Graham said, "In the survey conducted in hiring the new police chief, Fairfax County residents raised community trust as the most important issue. To hire a candidate with any racially-charged use of force incident in their past is not starting from a foundation on which trust can be built." The Resolution cited four incidents regarding Chief Davis's professional policing history.

Two occurred in the 1990s, one in 1993 and the other in 1999. Each ended with court judgments against Davis [Prince George's County Police Department]. The other two incidents occurred during Davis's last two years in a police position [Commissioner-Baltimore Police Department]. In 2016, Davis authorized secret drone surveillance of the people of the City of Baltimore. In 2017, Davis imposed a six-day lockdown of a neighborhood after an African American Baltimore detective was killed by a bullet from his service weapon the day before he was to testify to a federal grand jury regarding corruption in the Baltimore police force.

Graham said, "A year and a day after the murder of George Floyd, we should not need to remind our elected officials that as Democrats, we believe we need to overhaul the criminal justice system from top to bottom. Police brutality is a stain on the soul of our nation."

"Therefore, in the context of the events of the last year and this moment, the Fairfax County Democratic Committee does not trust that Chief Davis is the right person to lead our police force," said Graham.

Kelly Hebron is Chair of the Fairfax Democratic Black Caucus within FCDC. She said at the Press Conference that the caucus was driven to act and hold the elected Supervisors accountable "to ensure the reduction and prevention of racially motivated violence against its diverse residents during police encounters."

"Transparency is the first step toward fairness and trust...We can do better in Fairfax County," said Hebron.

Rev. Dr. Vernon C. Walton, Senior Pastor, First Baptist Church, Vienna, stood with Rev. Dr. Denise Wilson, President, Baptist Ministers Conference of Northern Virginia, and Rev. Dr. Augustus Henderson, Northern Virginia Baptist Association Moderator. Walton said he was pleased to stand in solidarity with the FCDC Caucus to support its Resolution.

"I believe it providential that the committee would take such a bold, progressive vote on the anniversary of the death of George Floyd...Many of our elected officials, those of whom supported this candidate [Davis]... held signs...kneeled in solidarity...pledged their commitment to police reform," said Walton.

According to Walton, he heard County Supervisors say, 'If only I had known... I've heard them say that you matter, Black and Brown constituency matters. What you haven't said publicly is he [Davis] is the wrong choice. While many of you have said it privately, you have not said it publicly... Despite all that you knew and despite all of you are aware of, you forged ahead. And now you asked a community of people who have been profiled for years to give him an opportunity.'

"I asked you today, Supervisors, how costly will the mistake have to be, or you're willing to admit that this was not the best decision," said Walton.

CANDIDATE for Virginia H-34, Jennifer Adeli stood in solidarity with those assembled at the May 26 Press Conference. Afterward, she said, "I was proud to vote in favor of this Resolution...and stand with FCDC and members of the FCDC Black caucus today. Every elected leader, or candidate asking the community to trust them to lead, should have an opinion on this vital issue. We need a Chief who reflects our values and the community and starts off their tenure with a clean slate. Davis does not meet those basic requirements."

A spokesperson for the office of Chairman Jeffrey C. McKay (D-At Large) Fairfax County Board of Supervisors said, "We have no comment."

Instead, she attached the May 20 open letter from the nine Democratic members of the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors -- Jeff McKay-Chairman of the Board of Supervisors; Rodney Lusk-Chairman of the Public Safety Committee, Lee District Supervisor; Penny Gross-Chairman of the Personnel Committee, Mason District Supervisor; James Walkinshaw-Braddock District Supervisor; John Foust-Dranesville District Supervisor; Walter Alcorn-Hunter Mill District Supervisor; Dan Storck-Mount Vernon District Supervisor; Dalia Palchik-Providence District Supervisor; and Kathy Smith-Sully District Supervisor -- sent to the members of the Fairfax County Democratic Committee.

The letter from the Democratic Supervisors to the members of FCDC read in part, "The police chief is hired by the Board of Supervisors, serves at our pleasure, and as such, his performance will be evaluated regularly. He is well aware of our expectation that he deliver smart and meaningful reforms that benefit all in our community... Chief Davis has already been talking and most importantly, listening, to members of our community. He has his line of communication open to any community member who wishes to speak with him."

Faith Sustained Many During COVID-19 Crisis

How a belief in a higher power helped some people cope with pandemic.

BY MARILYN CAMPBELL
THE CONNECTION

As she experienced the emotions and uncertainty around the coronavirus pandemic, Bracha Goetz turned to the tenets of her faith. As an Orthodox Jew, following the guidelines set forth in the Torah were already part of her daily life. As the outlook on COVID-19 begins to look more optimistic, Goetz says that she can reflect on the ways in which her faith helped safeguard her mental and emotional wellbeing.

“The basis of Judaism is gratitude, and gratitude is essential for enjoying life, said Goetz, a Maryland based author of the book “Searching for God in the Garbage.” “When going through a difficult time, focusing on being grateful for just one thing can help to uplift us.”

Like Goetz, more than a third of Americans say that the COVID-19 crisis strengthened their faith in a higher power and offered lessons from God, according to a report by Pew Research Center. Practicing those beliefs during a crisis can help support mental and emotional health and wellbeing.

“Religious faith or belief in a higher power gives personal meaning, explanations for world events. They may help us make sense of suffering and distress from our experiences during the COVID-19 pandemic,” said Jerome Short, Ph.D. Associate Professor of Psychology at George Mason University. “Belonging to a faith community can offer support from other members and reassuring rituals that soothe our distress.”

The presence of a higher power can help believers feel that they are not alone, says Brian Flanagan, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Theology at Marymount University. WWW.CONNECTIONNEWSPAPERS.COM

Bracha Goetz says that gratitude is the basis of her faith and has sustained her during the coronavirus pandemic.

sity and author of the book, “Stumbling in Holiness: Sin and Sanctity in the Church.” “Christianity teaches us about a God who is present, even in the worst of circumstances,” he said. “But Christianity also proclaims a God who never abandons creation, and is present in our suffering in a way similar to that of a mother who suffers when her child is sick or hurting.”

“Faith for me means trusting in a God who is close and not distant, and in a certain sense is closest to us when we most need divine comfort,” continued Flanagan.

Belief in a higher power has long been linked to improved physical and mental health, such as a recent study by the Mayo Clinic. “Religious and spiritual practices are associated with greater life satisfaction, less anxiety and depression, and longer life,” said Short.

The increase in the practicing of faith that occurred during the COVID-19 crisis offers religious leaders an opportunity to sustain that momentum. “We all got a huge push forward spiritually, as we have stopped taking so many things for granted that we may not have appreciated before,” said Goetz. “Now that we have seen how many of the precious blessings in our lives can be gone in a moment, we have become more grateful people.”

Regeneron Pharmaceuticals, Inc. (NASDAQ: REGN) and Society for Science announced on May 21 the Grand Awards in the 2021 Regeneron International Science and Engineering Fair (Regeneron ISEF), the world’s largest global high school competition.

Vienna resident Chelsea Hu from BASIS Independent McLean High School, won the 3rd place Grand Award for her research and discovery of using Eastern Skunk Cabbages as a natural and sustainable solution for combating bank erosion in the category of Earth and Environmental Sciences. Using her bank simulation models, she designed and implemented a novel discovery where she found that eastern skunk cabbages could decrease bank erosion by 32% on average.

The Grand Awards Ceremony was held on May 21, featuring more than 1,800 young scientists representing 49 states and 64 countries. More than $5 million was awarded to the winners, who were evaluated based on their projects’ rigor, innovation and level of scientific inquiry.

AAUW Announces High School STEM Awards Recipients

Six high school students have been selected as the recipients of the 2021 Math, Science, and Computer Science Achievement Awards from the McLean Area Branch of the American Association of University Women (AAUW). For the last eight years, the McLean Area Branch has partnered with counselors at local high schools to present these achievement awards to female students finishing their junior year. The program was expanded in 2021 to include an award in computer science. The branch instituted the awards to encourage young women to pursue educational opportunities related to STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math).

The criteria for the awards include a demonstrated record of overall academic success and a distinguished record of achievement in math, science, or computer science. Career center counselors at the schools manage the process of selecting the students. The following students received the 2021 awards:

McLean High School – Math: Susan Shobeiri

McLean High School – Science:

Vivian Kreeb

McLean High School – Computer Science: Alex Vasilcoiu

Langley High School – Math: Zhiyun (Mary) Zhou

Langley High School – Science: Anvitha Puritipati

Langley High School – Computer Science: Summer Parise

Each student received a certificate of merit and a check for $100, and the awards were funded through the branch’s fundraising efforts. The students will be invited to a branch event in the fall for recognition by branch members. The members of the Local Awards Committee that managed the high school Math, Science, and Computer Science Achievement Awards are Myrtle Hendricks-Corales, Nina McVeigh, and Judy Page, STEM Chair.

For more information on the McLean Area Branch, visit the AAUW McLean Area website at <http://mclean-va.aauw.net>.

VIENNA POLICE HIGHLIGHTS

The following summary contains various incidents of general interest as well as vehicular crashes handled by the Town of Vienna, Virginia Police Department from May 21, 2021 – May 28, 2021.

INCIDENTS

Sex Offense -- Highland Street, NW

Between May 20 at 6 a.m. and May 25 at 8:49 a.m.

A resident reported that his juvenile daughter had been communicating with someone for a few days over social media. The communication became more explicit and the man began sending pornographic images. This case is being investigated.

Violation of a Protective Order -- 100 Block Center Street, South May 20, 11:35 a.m.

On May 27, a resident reported that her daughter has been sending her text messages in violation of her protective order. This case is under investigation.

Lost Property -- Vienna Community Center, 120 Cherry Street, SE May 21, 6:50 a.m.

A citizen reported that they lost a set of keys near the bike trail at the Community Center.

Arrest – Drunk In Public -- Wawa

465 Maple Avenue, West May 22, 11:47 p.m.

Officers responded to the report of a suspicious man in the parking lot. Upon their interaction with the man, they detected signs of impairment. MPO Smith arrested the 26-year-old man from Whip-poorwill Terrace in Chantilly. After being trespassed from Wawa, he was transported to the Fairfax County Adult Detention Center and charged with Drunk In Public.

Found Property -- 400 Block Church Street, NE

May 23, 8:20 a.m.

A resident dropped off ammo for destruction.

Police Service -- Vienna Town Green

144 Maple Avenue, East

May 23,, 10:20 a.m.

Officers assisted in searching for a mentally challenged man who was walking with a group when he became separated from them. The man was located a short time later and reunited with his group.

Assault -- 200 Block Cedar Lane, SE

May 23, 12:30 p.m.

A resident was in the community laundry room of his apartment building when another resident came in and began arguing with him. The other man then spat in the resident's face. An officer was able to speak to both men and allow them to calm down. The resident was advised of the warrant process should he wish to pursue charges.

Animal Case – Quarantine -- 1100 Block Redwood Drive, SE May 23, 2:30 p.m.

A citizen was walking his dog when another dog ran out of his yard and attacked his dog. While attempting to separate the animals, the citizen was bitten on the hand. The owner of the attacking dog was advised of the quarantine procedure.

Destruction of Property -- Vienna Elementary School

128 Center Street, South

May 23, 5:08 p.m.

A dispute between juveniles escalated when one of the juveniles pushed the other's bike over, damaging it.

Vehicle Tampering -- 300 Block Charles Street, SE

Between May 24 at 12 p.m. and May 28 at 11 p.m.

A resident reported that someone entered their vehicles and rummaged through them.

Animal Case -- Hope Advanced Veterinary Center

140 Park Street, SE

Nearly Nicked

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

Recently, I made the mistake of clicking on an email from an unfamiliar sender. It said "Membership Renewed," as in money had been spent by yours truly. But I hadn't spent any money renewing a membership that I knew of, and there is, I imagine, the axis on which some phishing scams are turning: By peeking your instinct to know where and what one's money is doing. Maybe I forgot something? Maybe my wife, Dina, paid for something and forgot to mention it? Maybe, maybe, maybe - so I clicked. The email looked as if it had been sent by "Geek Squad" with whom I have a service contract so I called to inquire further about this 'paid membership.'

The conversation began innocently enough. They confirmed my membership and seemed to have my pertinent data as well so I continued. When I couldn't recall this money being spent - and they couldn't tell me the last four numbers of the account which had been debited, I grew cautious, as I had been down this road once before. Nevertheless, I persisted. Since I had "Geeks" (or whomever, unbeknownst to me) on the phone, I figured I'd ask if they could fix a computer problem (no volume) and asked if the repair was covered by my service contract. They assured me that it was. And so, I gave them access to my computer so they could address the problem remotely. After computer fits and starts, and curious delays, they confessed that they were unable to fix the problem. So, and here it is, the hook: since they were unable to fix my computer, they wanted to refund me the 'membership' fee. That was excruciatingly familiar so I knew it was time to exit stage right.

What had happened to me previously is that I didn't get out soon enough. I didn't know then what I know now so I agreed to the refund and gave them the last four of my account, and sure enough they electronically deposited the money into my checking account (or so it appeared. I later learned that no actual money had ever been transferred). However, they made a mistake, they said. They deposited $3,000 instead of $300. They apologized profusely at their mistake and requested that I pay them back $3,000, which I thought was odd; why not just withdraw the money the same way they deposited it? They said they couldn't and I needed to pay them back. When I refused to follow their directions on how to pay them back (again, since they couldn't withdraw the money/stop payment, whatever), by getting cash and then going to a Western Union office and sending it back that way, I knew I was hooked. Then they threatened to disable my computer unless I paid them back exactly as I had been instructed. Then they erased all the icons on my desktop as a last attempt to coerce me to pay up. At this point, it had been nearly two hours since I made first contact, and I could see/feel where the conversation was going, so I risked it and hung up. Sure enough, my computer was wiped clean and locked. I couldn't access anything. The next day, I called Best Buy and explained the problem and how it had happened. They suggested I bring in my computer tower for an analysis. Within a day, they had identified the problem and offered a solution. They could unlock my computer, no problem, but the computer would have to be reset to the way it was when I first bought it. It wasn't a total disaster as most data was retrievable. As "The Three Stooges" would have said: "It wasn't a total loss."

This recent caller was once again leading me down the garden path. A path which would have ended at a rabbit hole into which me and money would have disappeared. The caller tried desperately to keep me on the line. I said I was at work and had to go. I told him I didn't expect the call to last so long and I promised to call him back. He had access to my computer - remotely, so I was afraid he could cause similar computer trouble as had happened before under eerily similar circumstances. He confirmed - so he thought, that I had his phone number and so I hung up, cautiously optimistic that I hadn't earned his wrath. I never called him back but for the next four hours, he called me back several times, a number from Los Angeles. I never answered, obviously. If I had I might not be pleased with myself.
