Block Party Blast at St. Tim's

Parishioners and community members rock in the sunshine.

BY MERCIA HOBSON
THE CONNECTION

St. Timothy's Episcopal Church in the Town of Herndon rocked the church grounds with a block party full of music, games, food trucks, friendships, and joy. St. Tim's Block Party ran from late afternoon to early evening on July 28, highlighted by a performance by Big Al's Garage. According to the Rev. Charles Cowherd, Pastor-in-Charge at St. Tim's, despite the oppressive heat, over a hundred people attended the event, including parishioners from the English- and Spanish-speaking congregations as well as community members.

Free and open to the public, the crowd of young and old enjoyed the moon bounce, games, dinner and icy treats from local food trucks, and picnicking beneath the shade trees as the oldies band played. With temperatures exceeding 90 degrees, the numerous kid-

The Great Falls Volunteer Fire Department's Fairfax County Fire & Rescue Station #12 deserves special recognition. As a community service, Robert Ferretti, Rudy Corado, and Sarah McMichael arrived at the block party in emergency vehicle 412. They

Local Colleges Address Gun Violence

Leaders at local colleges and universities will use research to recommend action to reduce gun violence.

BY MARILYN CAMPBELL
THE CONNECTION

Washington-area colleges and universities have united to find research-based strategies to reduce gun violence. The movement comes on the heels of several devastating mass shootings, most recently the school shooting in Uvalde, Texas. Called the “120 Initiative,” the name pays homage to the more than 120 people who die on average each day from gun violence.

“George Mason University originated the idea out of its own belief that no problem — not even America’s gun violence epidemic — is unsolvable,” said Paul Allvin, vice president of strategic communications and marketing at George Mason University. “Mason President Gregory Washington approached his friend University of Maryland President Darryll Pines to lead a new effort to bring faculty from DC-area schools together to find new ways to bring down gun violence in America.”

Faculty and researchers from disciplines that play a role in gun violence, including public health, public safety, mental health and civil rights will work collaboratively

GMU President Gregory Washington

“The 120 Initiative is a great opportunity for policy to be influenced by research.”

to offer recommendations. In addition to George Mason and the University of Maryland, Marymount University, Montgomery College and Northern Virginia Community College are among the schools that will participate. The initiative will be coordinated by the Consortium of Universities of the Washington Metropolitan Area.

“The 120 Initiative is a great opportunity for policy to be influenced by research,” said Stephanie Foster, Ph.D., Vice Provost for Academic Affairs at Marymount University. “My research focuses on violence in young adulthood. I’ve been interested in the factors that are likely to exacerbate violent behavior — more importantly, I’m interested in protective factors that insulate against the likelihood of violence.”

Erik Alda, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of Criminal Justice at Marymount University added, “Part of my work examines the socioeconomic drivers of crime and violence, and this would include gun violence, too,” he said. “I have done a lot of this work in developing countries where gun violence is a perennial issue, and we can learn a lot from what those drivers are and how they manifest themselves in different contexts.

Another stream of my research assesses the impacts of programs or interventions on violence, which would include gun violence.”

Marcus Rosano, Director, Media Relations and Public Relations at Montgomery College said, “We’re still in the process of identifying our experts for the workgroup. The conversation is going on at the academic affairs and presidential office level.”

The research and analysis phase is estimated to take six months to complete and will produce recommendations designed to curtail gun violence.

“Just as smoking deaths were not reduced by legislation alone, neither will gun deaths,” said Allvin. “We just need the help of faculty to recommend effective new strategies to try as we also wait for effective legislation.”

Historically Black Church Marks 150th Anniversary

Shiloh Baptist Church in McLean, Va., kicks off events celebrating 150 years.

Interfaith congregations from throughout the region join together to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the historically black Shiloh Baptist Church at 8310 Turning Leaf Lane in McLean. The religious center has supported area people through times of segregation, before women’s right to vote, political unrest and progress as Northern Virginia has grown.

“God has done so many great things throughout the life of this ministry; however, there’s so much more to be accomplished,” said the Rev. Dr. Robert F. Cheeks Jr., pastor, who celebrates 15 years of leading this congregation. “At a time when many churches have closed, Shiloh still stands on solid ground.”

Shiloh Baptist Church was founded and organized in 1872 by Cyrus Franklin Carter, who also organized other historic churches like First Baptist Church of Vienna and First Baptist Church Chesterbrook, Virginia.

Events kicked off with food and fellowship at a picnic on Saturday, July 16, at the church. Congregants from Lewinsville Presbyterian and First Baptist Church Chesterbrook attended the event.

The celebration continues on Aug. 20 with “Spotlight on Shiloh” from 3- 5 p.m. at the McLean Community Center.

Michelle Spady, Anniversary team lead and Shiloh member, says, “We are proud members of a church that has sustained and thrived worship and service in the community for 150 years.”

Commemorating this historic milestone culminates in September with a brunch cruise on Sept. 17, and a special service on Sunday, Sept. 18 at the church when the restored church bell will be ceremoniously rung. The public is invited.

These Children Need You

Colombian orphans vacation locally, dream of connections to their future families.

BY MERCIA HOBSON
THE CONNECTION

Kidsave changed the names of the children eligible for adoption for security reasons.

Orphans from Colombia eight years old and over are frequently ignored and have little chance of growing up in a family. They need champions to change their lives or face aging out of care alone. This summer, eight families from Northern Virginia, Maryland, and the District of Columbia, including Russell Barczyk and his wife Brigitte Miller of Alexandria, are hosting older orphans eligible for adoption from Colombia for five weeks, through Aug. 8.

They are part of the Kidsave Summer Miracles program. The youth and teens are experiencing life in a U.S. family. For some, it will be the connection to their lasting, caring family.

"My wife and I started looking into consultations with different adoption agencies and available options. We heard about Kidsave (and) the program they have with kids in Colombia," Barczyk said. He explained that 43 Colombian children are spending the summer in the United States, primarily in the Washington, D.C., Los Angeles, and Chicago areas. Eight families in the greater Washington, D.C. area care for nine children, including two sisters. The profiles of all 43 children are available on the Kidsave website.

Host families provide children eligible for adoption the opportunity to spend summer vacations in the United States. While some families will adopt the children they are hosting, other families will become lifelong advocates and others will help the children find their permanent, loving families. According to the nonprofit's website, approximately 80 percent of the children who have participated in the Summer Miracles program since its inception were matched for adoption.

The Kidsave DC Summer Miracles Cookie Decorating event was held at the Jane E. Lawton Community Rec Center in Chevy Chase, Md. on Sunday, July 31. Approximately 40 people, including families interested in adoption, future hosts, current hosts, and orphans from Colombia, were present. Most children engaged in the activity, with Spanish words and much laughter filling the room. For others, especially the hosts and families who adopted years ago, and others, it was an opportunity to talk and compare experiences.

Kristina Campbell was there with her teenage daughter from Colombia, who participated in the LA Kidsave program three years ago. When asked what she liked most about her mother, Kristina's daughter said, "It is the fact that she is my mom." According to Campbell, her daughter learned she would be adopted a few days after returning to Colombia from a Kidsave Los Angeles program. Campbell said the adoption process takes between nine and twelve months.

Beth Dresing is a 10-year Kidsave volunteer, co-chair of the D.C. Metro Summer Miracles board of trustees, a host, and, most importantly, the mother of a son she adopted in 2011. Dresing said he was short and unable to jump hurdles during high school track and field successfully, so he tried out for dance instead. Her son is now a senior in college, majoring in dance and excelling at it.

Barczyk said Justin, age 12, who he and his wife are hosting, enjoys drawing, reading, cooking, watching movies, and listening to Colombian music. According to his online profile, "Justin loves soccer and dreams of traveling to Brazil, specifically to visit their soccer stadiums.... Until then, he's happy to play soccer with his friends—and potentially with his dream family."

We Need Your Help Again

We are sincerely grateful and thankful to you for helping in 2021 to save one of America's oldest newspapers, the Alexandria Gazette Packet, publishing continuously since 1784

CENTRE VIEW

Thank you to the hundreds of supporters who helped to keep all your Connection Newspapers alive throughout Alexandria, Fairfax County, Arlington County and Potomac, Md. along with affiliated websites and digital media. Now we need help again in 2022.

Each local newspaper's mission aspires to provide greater community service, and we do know that our communities are better off if we continue to publish. Last year's financial support from readers and supporters like you bridged the shortfall before Federal PPP funding arrived, and both made our survival possible. We now await a decision for a grant from Rebuild Virginia in early February that we hope will help us in 2022 and beyond. But we need help to survive the first quarter, always a brutal time for cash flow in weekly newspapers. Thank you.

Please, help save these historical papers. All gifts will be used to fund our printed newspapers and websites and to meet obligations to our loyal and patient employees, writers, contractors and suppliers.

The ongoing pandemic continues to crush many newspapers across the country, and our newspapers continue to be at risk. The Northern Virginia area's best read and most trusted source for community news includes the Alexandria Gazette Packet, Mount Vernon Gazette and all Connection Newspapers in the metropolitan region.

The pandemic has hit small businesses hard, which in turn has reduced advertising revenue that keeps these local newspapers alive to provide hyper local news to residents. It feels like no small miracle to be looking forward into 2022.

Dispensing Wisdom, Or Not

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

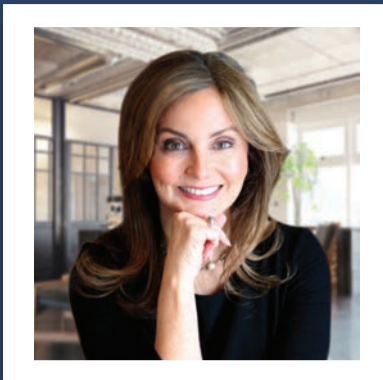

Having spent way too much time visiting in a hospital recently, I only have one question: Were there always this many Purell "healthy soap" and hand sanitizers dispensing their healthful cleanliness before the pandemic? If you hadn't noticed, let me be the one to assure you; whatever supply chain issues exist in the world, there appears to be no shortage of Purell soap and hand sanitizer. They are everywhere. On nearly every wall 'round every corner. Of course, there mounted in every bathroom as well. It seems whatever turn, in whatever direction, you'll find a Purell dispenser; on either side, in front of you and/or behind you. In fact, they're everywhere you can imagine and a few places you can't. So far, the only place I haven't seen a Purell dispenser is on the elevator. Though there's always one on the wall immediately outside the elevator's floor stop, barely a step or two to the side.

There are so many dispensers on walls throughout the hospital, I'm wondering if there's an employee specifically assigned to monitor their level and to refill their cartridges the moment their level falls below the Mendoza-type line (extremely low). Given how big this hospital is, and how long the corridors are, if the dispenser isn't replenished the moment its levels are low-ish, it might be days before the dedicated Purell-refill employee returns to that wall. It reminds me of the story I heard years ago while tour-boating in San Francisco Bay. As we floated under The Golden Gate Bridge, the guide said the bridge is constantly being painted. That's because the painting process takes so long that by the time the painting is finished at one end, it's time to start painting beginning at the other end. Talk about job security. It's a never-ending brush with destiny, especially when you consider the risk, being so high above water and exposed to the elements. Tending to the Purell dispensers feels like that. As long as the hospital remains open, there will be a need for Purell "healthy soap" and hand sanitizer dispensers and the refills that are necessary.

For all the proper hygiene reasons, the nurses are constantly touching the dispensers; before they enter the patient's room and again when they leave the patient's room and everywhere in between. There's a seemingly non-stop whirl of the motorized apparatus that dispenses the Purell products. In the bathrooms, the "healthy soap" dispensed requires water to finish the task. Outside the bathrooms, the dispenser produces a foamy substance that one is directed to rub their hands until dry. No water required. It has been my observation that of all the things that happen in a hospital, nothing comes close, in its frequency of use or in its sheer numbers than the activity surrounding these Purell dispensers. In second place, a distant second in my opinion, would be the use of the nitrile (not latex) "clean" gloves. They are also mounted on the walls, rarely in the halls, mostly in patient rooms, three boxes: one for small, medium, and large hands. Other than maintenance and food delivery (they were their own gloves), whoever enters a patient's room must glove up. Of course, that only happens after they've waived their hand under the automated Purell dispenser. I certainly haven't been counting, but those boxes, 250 count, are regularly emptied as well, and replaced with new boxes. However, their numbers pale in comparison to the numbers of Purell dispensers and refills.

You'd be surprised what your mind conjures while sitting by yourself in a patient's room, and one who's unable to talk or even squeeze your hand. Comic relief is almost mandatory. And considering the circumstances, wondering is not far from hoping.
