Local Teen Makes International Debut

Kat Stockton performs at Starmus, a global festival honoring science communication through art and music.

Instead of hitting the books, she hit the stage.

Kat Stockton spent her 19th birthday and first days of college in life's classroom on the other side of the world — observing architecture, culture and history of Armenia, conversing with some of the world's greatest science minds and musicians, and performing for 20,000 people.

"Artists, musicians and scientists are bound together by human passion and creativity," said Stockton.

Classically trained, Stockton traded her upright bass for a microphone during her rock-n-roll debut at Starmus, a global festival that engages some of the planet's top minds in the spirit of discovery, fusing art, music and science to enhance science communication.

Starmus was co-founded in 2011 by astrophysicist Brian May, who is also known as the lead guitarist of the band, Queen. The festival has attracted the world's greatest thinkers like Stephen Hawking, Nobel laureates, astrophysicists like Neil DeGrasse Tyson, Apollo-era astronauts Buzz Aldrin and Charlie Duke, and many rock stars.

"It was humbling and uplifting to be around so many people who are super accomplished. Meeting famous people was casual," Stockton said, elated to meet one of her music heroes, Armenian-American artist Serj Tankian. "I got some tips from those I look up to in the music world. Keep your eyes open and your priorities straight."

Stockton hails from Great Falls, Virginia. She attended the Potomac School in McLean and performed with the Capitol Symphonic Youth Orchestras at Carnegie Hall before scholarship and opportunity led to study with industry professionals at Michigan's Interlochen School of the Arts where she graduated in May. Performing in the rising tech hub of Yerevan, the oldest consistently inhabited city on Earth, provided a different learning experience than Indiana University's Jacobs School of Music, where Stockton majors in audio engineering and production.

Stockton performed with a band that called itself Syzygy, consisting of students still attending Interlochen. The band's name, Syzygy, is an astronomical term for celestial objects, such as planets or the sun, earth and moon, forming a straight line.

"We were teenagers who had not worked together as a band and we learned what to do and what not to do and I am grateful for the opportunity," said Stockton.

"This trip gave the kids an idea of how varied a performance could be, in terms of scope, preparation and professionalism," said Marc Lacuestra, Interlochen's director of music production and engineering. "They have learned how to be flexible and how to roll with the punches and make a performance happen under less-than-ideal circumstances, but they also know how smooth a performance runs when everything is done right and everyone is professional."

Five of the band's performed songs were penned or cowritten by Stockton. After performing 10 tunes at a tech center in Gyumri near Armenia's Turkish border, Syzygy closed this year's Starmus festival in the capital city of Yerevan with a nine-song set. The last number was Stockton's "Giant," which is about powering through pain and finding one's voice and purpose.

"It was powerful to end on this song because it was about my personal journey," said Stockton.

As 27 hours of travel home got underway, conflict erupted on Armenia's border. "People my age were so determined to fight,"

she said. "Even with a tumultuous history, (Armenian) people preserve their culture. The youth are forward thinking and united. Great to get another view and talk to people my age and see how they are handling."

As much as the music, memories of young adults met in Armenia struck a chord. "I am really inspired to be myself. I experienced that I could be that someone who gives hope through music."

That's a feeling Stockton will continue to chase as she completes missed college assignments and continues to broaden her musical spectrum in an upcoming college performances of "L'Étoile."

"I have found a light to follow. I've made the first steps," she said.

Challenges for County's Special Education Students

Special Education PTA president and FCPS respond.

THE CONNECTION

Disparities for special education students in Fairfax County Public Schools, cited in the 210-page FCPS Special Education Comprehensive Program Review: Year 2 Final Report by American Institutes for Research, did not surprise Amanda Campbell. She is the president of the Fairfax County Special Education Parent Teacher Association (SEPTA).

Campbell highlighted that the final review mirrored SEPTA's findings to the division. "It was very validating to see it backed by data," Campbell said.

The report was the second of two annual deliverables by American Institutes for Research, which the division contracted in October 2020 to conduct an independent, third-party review of its special education program.

American Institutes for Research presented its Year 1 interim report and presentation document at a session in September 2021, followed by its 2022 Final Report <https://bit.ly/3m3JQpv>. The report's scope did not include special education programs during COVID-19.

The division's four original goals for its special education program to AIR's two-year comprehensive review were: one, design, structure, and processes; two, human capital; three, evidence-based practices; and four, communication. "Restraint and seclusion would be specifically OUTSIDE OF SCOPE for the purposes of this review," according to the division's RFP 2000003084 Special Education Comprehensive Review.

"We are very appreciative of the work that has been done in compiling this report," said Dr. Michelle Boyd, assistant superintendent of Special Services at FCPS. "Our staff has worked closely with students and families, which is reflected in the report's mention of positive feedback from parents on the quality of FCPS instructional staff."

Campbell addressed what she considered the top four important findings of the lengthy review.

❖ First, "Fidelity of implementation is a point that we (SEPTA) have been raising since being chartered in April 2017," Campbell said. She referenced a research question in the final report, "To what extent do schools implement special education services with fidelity?"

Fidelity of the implementation of special education intervention programs is minimal and inconsistent across programs, according to the independent report. And special education services are implemented inconsistently across the district.

Campbell said that programs and best practices for students with disabilities had been identified. However, teachers and support staff who interact with students face difficulty implementing programs effectively. A poorly implemented program can fail students just as easily as a poorly designed one. AIR's finding was important to Campbell. "If the programs are not implemented with the same evidence-based science, then the outcomes are not going to be the same," she said.

"That time aspect is a critical part of fidelity," said Campbell. The time the program requires is not always what the students receive, according to Campbell. She described scheduling around multiple services as a giant jigsaw puzzle. "It is critical that we get kids the time they need in these programs for them to succeed," Campbell said. To implement a practice or program "with fidelity," teachers should understand how to implement evidence-based practices centered on five elements: adherence, exposure/duration (time), delivery quality, program specificity, and student engagement.

❖ Second was Campbell's concern was that the division's special education services are inconsistently implemented across its five regions and schools (1k.2.). It is "very individualized and dependent on where you live in the county and what school," Campbell said — leading to a question of equity.

The Fairfax County Public Schools division is the eleventh largest in the United States. It serves a diverse population of about 178,635 students from Pre-K through 12. In all, 14.9 percent of the total student population are students with disabilities; 31.7 percent are economically disadvantaged; and 19 percent are English language learners. Approximately 198 schools and centers are dispersed across five distinct regions within the district, covering 391 square miles.

❖ Campbell's third concern: Students with disabilities disproportionately receive in- and out-of-school suspensions compared with peers without disabilities (1a.3.). SEPTA and the division have discussed this since 2019. The differences are dramatic.

❖ Campbell's fourth concern was how little parent input was evident in IEPs. "Results from the IEP sample review show minimal documentation of parent input on IEP documents. Nearly 38 percent of the IEPs in our sample did not include any written evidence of parent input within the IEP itself," cited the review (1f.4). AIR reviewed a randomly selected, representative sample of 300 IEPs.

According to the U.S. Department of Education, "Each public school child who receives special education and related services must have an Individualized Education Program (IEP). Each IEP must be designed for one student and must be a truly individualized document. The IEP creates an opportunity for teachers, parents, school administrators, related services personnel, and students (when appropriate) to work together to improve educational results for children with disabilities. The IEP is the cornerstone of a quality education for each child with a disability."

According to Campbell, parents should be equal partners in the IEP process. "When you have a statistic showing so little parent input, it encapsulates the concerns that families have noted. Their input is not included. That is one of the incredibly validating findings of this report," Campbell said.

Boyd, the assistant superintendent of Special Services, said the division knows "there is work to be done to improve outcomes for students with disabilities." Boyd named areas such as "multi-tiered systems of support, inclusive practices, transitions, communication with stakeholders, and exploring ways to address special education teacher workload."

Among other findings related to students with disabilities, as reported by AIR, FCPS does not meet Virginia state targets for the percentage of time students with disabilities are included in the general education setting (1.e.1.). Access to evidence-based practices for students with disabilities varies. Special education students in some racial-ethnic groups are at a higher risk of being suspended or expelled for greater than ten days than their special education peers in all other racial groups (1a.3.).

The final review of AIR included 54 findings and 19 recommendations for changes to the division's policies, processes, and practices. AIR will engage in three months of pro bono strategic planning with the division's Department of Special Services to support them in the next steps. "We look forward to working collaboratively with stakeholders to develop a comprehensive special education enhancement plan," said Boyd.

Youth Rugby Registration Opens

PreK-12- grade students welcomed.

BY MERCIA HOBSON
THE CONNECTION

Registration is underway for fall rugby by Great Falls Youth Rugby and McLean Youth Athletics Inc. The two nonprofit amateur sports clubs are working together to give students in Northern Virginia the chance to play rugby.

Rugby is a crossover sport, with many of the same skills that can be found in other sports like basketball, football, soccer, according to Gary Coetzee, president of Great Falls Youth Rugby. During off seasons, players in other sports can stay fit, build endurance, and enhance skills through rugby, as verified by one of the best offensive linemen in Texas, Ian Reed, as spotlighted on the Great Falls Youth Rugby Facebook page. The agility and nature of rugby as a close-contact sport gave Reed and his teammates the edge on the gridiron, according to the recent Oct. 1 story in the Austin American Statesman by Rick Cantu. Reed is headed to Clemson to play on its football team.

Rugby also fosters virtues like humility, respect, dedication, confidence, and teamwork in its players. "All the required qualities that young people need while they stumble through life," said Coetzee.

Fall practices are held at Grange Field, 9818 Georgetown Pike, Great Falls, on Tuesdays from 5:30 to 7:00 p.m. and at Leo Field, 9830 Georgetown Pike, Great Falls, on Saturdays from 2-3:30 p.m. For more information, go to <http://www.greatfallsrugby.com/>.

We Need Your Help Again

We are sincerely grateful and thankful to you for helping in 2021 to save one of America's oldest newspapers, the Alexandria Gazette Packet, publishing continuously since 1784

Thank you to the hundreds of supporters who helped to keep all your Connection Newspapers alive throughout Alexandria, Fairfax County Arlington County and Potomac, Md. along with affiliated websites and digital media. Now we need help again in 2022.

Each local newspaper's mission aspires to provide greater community service, and we do know that our communities are better off if we continue to publish. Last year's financial support from readers and supporters like you bridged the shortfall before Federal PPP funding arrived, and both made our survival possible. We now await a decision for a grant from Rebuild Virginia in early February that we hope will help us in 2022 and beyond. But we need help to survive the first quarter, always a brutal time for cash flow in weekly newspapers. Thank you.

Please, help save these historical papers.

All gifts will be used to fund our printed newspapers and websites and to meet obligations to our loyal and patient employees, writers, contractors and suppliers.

The ongoing pandemic continues to crush many newspapers across the country, and our newspapers continue to be at risk. The Northern Virginia area's best read and most trusted source for community news includes the Alexandria Gazette Packet, Mount Vernon Gazette and all Connection Newspapers in the metropolitan region.

The pandemic has hit small businesses hard, which in turn has reduced advertising revenue that keeps these local newspapers alive to provide hyper local news to residents. It feels like no small miracle to be looking forward into 2022.

The pandemic has been a bear, financially and otherwise. Revenue plummeted at the beginning in 2020. Some beloved advertisers have stayed the course supporting us throughout, and many more have done what they can. In the fall of 2021 we saw the return of some advertising for events and Grand Openings, but now omicron clouds the horizon in so many ways. Revenue still remains short of expenses despite our greatly curtailed costs.

Connection Newspapers has been offering these local newspapers to residents for over 200 years. Countless residents have grown up with these papers covering significant moments in the lives of family and children, news, community events, school activities, and even pictures of your dogs and cats. Internet news and large national newspapers cannot provide the local connection or historical connection that local papers like Connection Newspapers and the Alexandria Gazette Packet provide. If your child, dog, mother, father, neighborhood, school has been featured, you understand the value of local community newspapers.

Time is Telling

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

After nearly three months of 24-7 focus on my brother's struggle to survive the effects of sepsis (and septic shock), the immediate, imminent danger seems to have passed. Passed into a daily grind of occupational, physical and speech therapies, all of which are monitored six to eight hours a day by a care giver who lends her assistance as well to assisting my brother with his activities of daily living. All of which are improving due to his commitment to get better. No doubt my brother has come a long way since his admission to SICU in mid-July and has progressed further and faster than those original doctors anticipated. Nonetheless, the path ahead is fraught with obstacles (not literally, although there are three sets of stairs inside his house and even two smaller ones outside just to get in).

My challenges are all too familiar to you regular readers: 13 years-plus living with non-small cell lung cancer, stage IV. Originally characterized as "terminal," changed approximately three years ago to simply "incurable" after my diagnosis changed to papillary thyroid cancer, supposedly the "friendly cancer" because of its curability. For my situation, not so much, however. I'll spare you the details, most of which I've relayed in previous columns anyway. Not that I ever expected a health guarantee but given my parent's long lives (both lived into their mid to late 80s), I kind of figured that I'd live into my 80s as well. That being presumed; it turns out the facts are somewhat different. Initially, in Feb. '09, I was "prognosed" for "13 months to two years." After my re-diagnosis three years ago, I was given a new lease on life, sort of, until a procedure to rid the thyroid cancer from my body was unsuccessful and so I received an amended timeline/prognosis: the prescription medication that I have been taking daily since Sept. '19 is effective for three years-ish. I'm now into the "ish" time.

But this is my obstacle, as it has been going on nearly 14 years. Nothing new, but it sure gets old, slowly. A cancer diagnosis upsets every thought/plan you had concerning your "road to find out," to quote Cat Stevens, concerning your future (heck, your present, too). And not that I didn't share this feeling with my brother, quite the opposite in fact. Other than my wife, Dina, he was my go-to resource. But now, given his own health challenges and his own cancer diagnosis to boot, we've sort of become equal partners. Not in crime, but in the methodology of surviving. Now, we're on the same team, if you get my meaning; both having been diagnosed with cancer. And it's this shared burden that binds us together more than we ever imagined. (When you've had two healthy parents who lived well into their 80s, you don't anticipate having your own health problems at younger ages than ever afflicted them. It's a presumption, sure, but doctors will often learn a great deal about your prospects by asking about your immediate family history: mother, father, siblings.)

Even though my brother is five years older than me, I never imagined him dying before me. As an older, big brother, I looked up to him. He took care of me. He couldn't possibly die before I do. This feeling became even more prevalent after I was diagnosed with lung cancer. Now I had a perfectly good explanation/understanding of why I was going to predecease him. Not that I was happy about it. Hardly. It just seemed the normal order of things, in my chronological life, anyway. Yet, after his recent health struggles and near-death experience (sepsis is very often a killer and extremely difficult to overcome), I'm forced to consider that my brother might die before my time, despite my issues. And this awareness/revelation has weakened me. Seeing him fight for his life every day in SICU as I did for nearly six weeks was a life-changing experience, especially as a younger brother who looked up to and was somewhat dependent on that older brother.

Now that he's home recuperating and rehabilitating as vigorously as he can, he is - to me, anyway, establishing his bona fides. He is not letting his recent health struggles/challenges negatively affect him at all. He has accepted his deficits and is working every day to overcome them. And even though he can't walk without the assistance of a walker, his goal is to do so. Though he may not be able "to leap tall buildings in a single bound" (or even walk up a few steps) he is my superman and I'm proud to share all our burdens together. And due to his tireless efforts to get better, once again, I don't feel as if he's going to predecease me; and in an odd way, that's extremely comforting to me.
