Fairfax City got Black History Month off to a meaningful start with a special ceremony, Jan. 28, inside the City Hall atrium and in Council chambers. The evening began with a catered reception with Rev. Jeffery Johnson, pastor of Mt. Calvary Baptist Church in Fairfax, as the guest of honor.

Johnson gave a dramatic recitation of the iconic "I Have a Dream" speech originally delivered by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. at the Aug. 28, 1963, March on Washington, D.C. Then Mayor Catherine Read presented a Black History Month Proclamation to him in front of City Council:

"Dr. Carter B. Woodson, a distinguished African American author, editor, publisher and historian, founded Black History Month, based on the belief that African Americans and all Americans should know their past in order to participate in the affairs of the country. We celebrate the diversity of Black people in the City of Fairfax, the Commonwealth of Virginia and our nation.

"We acknowledge that we have never fully lived up to the founding ideals of this country that all people are created equal. And we have often failed to acknowledge the contributions of those Black Americans whose courage, sacrifices and relentless efforts helped to build this country from the arrival of the first enslaved Africans in Virginia in 1619.

"We acknowledge systemic racism has resulted in Black Americans being more likely to die at an earlier age from all causes, with persons of color more greatly impacted by health inequities, disproportionately over-represented in our prison system and among our homeless populations, causing trauma over multiple generations within the Black community.

"We recognize that all people have inherent value and worth and are deserving of respect, dignity and basic human rights that have often been denied to Black Americans through institutionalized racism that persists to this day.

"We celebrate this year's Black History Month theme of 'African Americans and Labor,' focusing on the various and profound ways that [Black] work of all kinds has shaped this country ... including [via] thought leaders from Frederick Douglass and Ida B. Wells, Nannie Helen Burroughs and Rosa Parks, to the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and President Barack Obama ...

"Barriers to the full employment of African Americans have historically included exclusion from higher education, segregation of the federal workforce and military, disenfranchisement at the ballot box, and racism in hiring in many industries over hundreds of years."

The proclamation further stressed the investment generations of Black Americans have made to "the greatness of the American experience. We recognize those contributions go beyond our own borders to impact some of the great accomplishments in science, literature, diplomacy, the arts and athletics around the world."

Read then officially proclaimed February 2025 Black History Month in the City of Fairfax and encouraged residents to "seek out the many stories of the African American experience in our country through books, theater, movies, documentaries, features and other events. Black history is American history, every month of the year, and it is incumbent on all of us to know our country's full history and the importance of centuries of African American labor that built this nation."

Afterward, Johnson noted that his church was established in May 1870, nearly 155 years ago. He then told Read, "On behalf of Mt. Calvary Baptist Church and its parishioners, and the citizens of this great City, I thank you for this proclamation, I thank you for the regard and respect for African American history. And I also thank you that here, in this administration, our voices are welcome and our thoughts are considered."

Highlights of Fairfax County Proposed FY 2026 Budget

More challenging than COVID year budgets.

BY MERCIA HOBSON
THE CONNECTION

Fairfax County Executive Bryan Hill presented his proposed FY 2026 Advertised Budget Plan on Tuesday. Hill suggested a 1.5-cent real estate tax rate increase to $1.14 per $100 assessed value. That would generate $50.9 million, bringing the average homeowner's increase to slightly over $638.

Hill suggested a 3 percent prepared food and beverage tax that, if in effect January 2026, would generate net revenue of $48.1 million over six months. "That could be invested in county priorities or a portion of which could eliminate the need for a real estate tax rate increase in this budget," said Hill.

Hill noted that the county's commercial/industrial percentage of the total real estate assessment base decreased from 15.58 percent in FY 2025 to 14.80 percent in FY 2026. He said responsible budgeting is about balance, and his proposed budget included equal growth for county disbursements and transfers to Fairfax County Public Schools, with a growth rate of just under four-and-a-half percent. Hill acknowledged the proposed budget did not fully fund the superintendent's requested operating transfer. "A tight budget brings difficult choices, and one of the most challenging this year is funding the support of our schools. The superintendent's proposed budget includes a $268 million increase in school operating transfer, or about 10.4 percent slightly less than the amount discussed at our November forecast meeting. This transfer request exceeds last year's $254 million requests, which was the largest dollar increase request in county history," Hill said.

Hill's proposed budget focused on compensation for county employees. It fully funded the county's collective bargaining agreements with IAFF Local 2068: Fairfax County Professional Fire Fighters and the Fairfax County Chapter of the Southern States Police Benevolent Association and provided a full compensation package for non-represented employees.

"We have included employee compensation consistent with what our metrics show and consistent with what we know is necessary to retain the best and brightest employees."

— Jeff McKay, chairman,
Fairfax County Board of Supervisors

However, given the moderate revenue growth projected, the advertised budget did not include major investments in many county priorities.

Hill proposed a 2 percent increase to the transient occupancy (hotel) tax to mitigate further increases to the real estate tax rate. That would bring the rate from four to six percent and generate just over $13 million, a 6 percent rate that aligns with many jurisdictions in the area. "Half of this additional revenue is mandated for tourism promotion and has been held in balance pending discussions on its use. The remaining half can be utilized as general fund revenue and can be applied to balance the budget," Hill said. He noted that the state offers counties few revenue-generating options. Real estate tax is Fairfax County's primary revenue source.

Hill proposed dedicating an additional quarter penny of the real estate tax rate, or $8.5 million, for affordable housing to support the county's goal of reaching 10,000 new affordable homes by 2034.

This budget marks Hill's eighth as county executive. He said it had "been one of the most difficult ones" that he had to deal with, more so than during COVID when federal dollars came to the rescue. Hill said his 2026 Advertised Budget was set against "great uncertainty for our region, as the new presidential administration has begun taking actions to significantly reshape the federal government. ... Fairfax County is home to more than 50,000 federal workers, and even more workers are connected to businesses contracted with the federal government," Hill said.

Hill said they are seeing workers being laid off or furloughed and that the broader economic impacts of some of the president's actions, particularly concerning policies like tariffs, have yet to be realized. "It will be imperative for us to continually monitor actions at the federal level to determine if any updates to our revenue or expenditure projections are necessary," he said.

Hill's budget included $60 million in reductions, with 208 merit positions eliminated. Hill acknowledged that while the proposal focused on pay and benefits for county employees, other adjustments proved necessary, such as those "to address inflation, debt service obligations, state and federal mandates, new facilities and information technology needs."

Hill reiterated that the state does not fully meet its obligation for funding Fairfax County Schools according to a 2023 study by the Joint Legislative Audit and Review Commission (JLARC). Fairfax County makes up for state funding shortfalls with additional local funding.

"A tight budget brings difficult choices, and one of the most challenging this year is funding the support of our schools."

— Fairfax County Executive
Bryan Hill

Jeff McKay, chairman of the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors, clarified after Hill's presentation that every impacted merit employee would be offered another opportunity within the county. "That's one of the reasons for the proposed one-and-a-half cent tax increase. We have included employee compensation consistent with what our metrics show and consistent with what we know is necessary to retain the best and brightest employees."

"Clearly that is not what's happening across the river," said McKay. "As I mentioned earlier, this is going to have a significant, and you acknowledge significant, impact on our budget moving forward."

"The way you treat your employees says a lot about your organization."

The Home Stretch

BY SEN. ADAM EBBIN

As we approach the conclusion of the 2025 legislative session, I am working to bring a number of my bills over the finish line. This week I wanted to discuss a few pieces of legislation that many of you have written to me about.

substation, smaller projects, like those being built by Alexandria City Public Schools, can proceed while still contributing to maintain and upgrade the system. Delegate Kathy Tran (D-Fairfax) has worked hard on the House version of the bill, HB 2266.

Delegate Rip Sullivan (D-Fairfax) brought us HB 1791, another bill that would help our green economy. This bill creates the Electric Vehicle Rural Infrastructure Program and Fund, which would allow developers who install electric vehicle charging stations in rural areas to apply for a state grant. We have a growing number of electric vehicles, and easier drives to our state parks and other rural attractions help promote access and protect our environment.

Green Economy

Energy and a green economy for Virginia's future is a hot topic that comes up in the General Assembly. My bill on solar interconnection fees, SB 1058, deals with the costs of connecting new solar facilities to the electric grid. Recently, Alexandria Public High School's new Minnie Howard Campus and the new Douglas MacArthur Elementary School faced unexpected costs of $1.3 million and $105,000 respectively to integrate their new solar installations with the electrical grid due to associated infrastructure upgrade costs assessed by Dominion Energy. My bill would require the State Corporation Commission to establish a cost sharing program for required system upgrades to interconnect new solar facilities. By spreading interconnection upgrade costs among all new solar installations connected to a particular

Reducing Underage Vaping and Tobacco Use

One of the bills requiring the most legwork this session has been my bill, SB 1060, which aims to reduce underage vaping and tobacco use. Delegate Patrick Hope (D-Arlington) is sponsoring the House counterpart, HB 1946. Both bills would allow the confiscation of

Peachwave Frozen Yogurt Closes for Business

Hurt by inflation, poor location and a failed expansion.

ANATOMY OF A YOGURT BUSINESS MELTDOWN.

BY BONNIE HOBBS
THE CONNECTION

For many people, January represents a new year full of promise and, often, hope for a fresh start – or, at least, an improvement in their circumstances. But for David Waskiewicz, it meant the end of his business, Peachwave Frozen Yogurt, which closed Jan. 22.

It opened at University Mall in Fairfax in August 2020, during the pandemic. And despite it being in a quiet courtyard not visible from the parking lot and behind the main businesses, Peachwave eventually developed a loyal following.

It offered more than 150 flavors of frozen yogurt, 16 rotating flavors of gelato, several flavors of Dole Whip, plus smoothies and shakes. Fresh ingredients arrived daily, and the frozen yogurt was made on site. And although sales were initially slow through the pandemic, Waskiewicz said they'd risen dramatically by 2022 and "that prosperity continued" through the end of that year.

But in 2023, things took a nosedive, with several factors leading to the Fairfax store's demise, Waskiewicz said. They included inflation, new competition, a location with little foot traffic, and an expansion into Tysons Corner that failed.

"In January 2023, we opened a second location on the third floor of Tysons Mall," said Waskiewicz. "It was just a kiosk with four, frozen-yogurt machines. I was doing $10,000/month in sales, but the rent was $9,000/month. Plus – with business costs and employees' salaries – every month it was open, we were losing $2,000 to $5,000. We kept it open nine months before we had to pull the plug that October."

"A lot of the customers there were tourists, and many were from foreign countries," he explained. "And they were nervous about what the cost of their frozen yogurt would be, since it varied by weight, and they weren't used to that."

Meanwhile, although the Fairfax Peachwave was still a hit with its customers, debt from the Tysons location negatively impacted it. "We were always bleeding money," said Waskiewicz. Then in summer 2024, new competition for the Fairfax store opened up in nearby Springfield and Burke.

"So we ended that year 5-1/2 percent down from 2023 – and that's thousands of dollars," said Waskiewicz. "In addition, inflation in the costs of my food bases and all the cups and spoons ate into my profits. For example, a case of 1,000 cups went from $90 to $120 – and I went through a lot of cups."

Through it all, though, he didn't raise his prices. "I didn't want to add to my customers' burdens," he said. "Because my base is moms and kids, I wanted to keep it as affordable as could be for them. Desserts are a want-to-have product, not a need. So when people are having trouble with their own budgets, frozen yogurt becomes a rare treat for families. They cut this out before they do coffee."

Trouble was, when the Tysons location closed, Waskiewicz still had to make the loan payments for his machines and other equipment. And while operating that site, he'd taken out a personal loan, which also had to be repaid. Furthermore, he added, "I had to start using the profits from the Fairfax location to pay the Tysons debts."

Nonetheless, said Waskiewicz, "I proba-

Although Peachwave Frozen Yogurt had to close last month, in the 4-1/2 years it operated at University Mall in Fairfax, it developed a strong and happy customer base. "Our customers came from all over – even as far away as Arlington," said owner David Waskiewicz. "And we had wonderful, loyal guests in our local customers."

On Jan. 21, the last day it was open for business, Peachwave's tables were full, as people of all ages came one last time to enjoy their favorite flavors in the cheerful and colorful store. In the late afternoon, after school was out, several of the customers

"We've been coming in since it opened," said Osborne. "We're here at least once or twice a month. I usually go for chocolate

"I like the cotton-candy flavor and all the toppings," said LaFountain. "And this store has an inviting atmosphere."

Royal Flush for Opponents of ‘Casino Bill’

Virginia Senate Bill 982 dead for 2025.

BY MERCIA HOBSON
THE CONNECTION

The controversial Virginia Senate Bill 982, the so-called Fairfax Casino Bill introduced by Senate Majority Leader Scott Surovell, died late Wednesday afternoon after House leadership moved it between House committees for consideration. The Virginia House Appropriations Subcommittee on Commerce, Agriculture, and Natural Resources agreed to “Pass the Bill By for the Day.”

Surovell introduced Senate Bill 982, with the bill passing 24-16 in the Senate on Tuesday, Feb. 4. “When I read the paper about how much money Maryland was going to suck out of our commonwealth to pay for their schools — in both Maryland and [Prince George’s] County, I thought it was offensive, and I thought that we need to do something,” Surovell said. Maryland is home to MGM National Harbor Hotel and Casino, directly across the Potomac River from Alexandria.

If Virginia SB982 had passed the House and won Gov. Glenn Youngkin’s approval, it would have allowed Fairfax County to hold a local referendum for voters to decide whether Fairfax County would be added to the list as the fifth eligible host locality as described in part in Article 2, §58.1-4101 E.: “limited to a proposed site for a casino gaming establishment in Tysons located within one-quarter of a mile of an existing station on the Metro Silver Line, part of a coordinated mixed-use project development consisting of no less than 1.5 million square feet, within two miles of a regional enclosed mall containing not less than 1.5 million square feet of gross building area, and outside of the Interstate 495 Beltway.”

38) at 5:19 p.m. on Feb. 12. “SB982, the Casino Bill, has died in a House Appropriations Subcommittee.”

Supervisor Walter Alcorn (D-Hunter Mill), serving on the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors and passionate opponent of SB982, posted on X at 6:54 p.m., “What a wonderful gift, and thanks for your show of love this afternoon speaking out against the casino!”

The Great Falls Citizens Association released its newsletter, titled “House Subcommittee Action Halts Progress of Tysons Casino Bill,” at 6 p.m. According to the GFC, the Chairman, David Bulova, commented, “Today’s meeting was the subcommittee’s last meeting of the session.” “Therefore, the casino bill may be left in committee.”

GFC thanked Fairfax County Board Supervisor Jimmy Bierman (D-Dranesville) for his strong opposition to the bill and added

“What a wonderful gift, and thanks for your show of love this afternoon speaking out against the casino.”

— Supervisor Walter Alcorn

that its Special Committee on Legislative Action and the Land Use & Zoning Committee will continue to monitor the casino issue and any new initiatives that may develop.

Lynne Mulston, spokesperson for the No Fairfax Casino Coalition, expressed her gratitude to all the elected officials who opposed the bill in the GFC newsletter. “We extend our deepest gratitude to Senator Jennifer Boysko, whose bold, decisive leadership led the opposition to this casino bill. Of significance, we acknowledge the thousands of Fairfax County residents who signed petitions opposing the bill, wrote members of the General Assembly, donated to the fight, planted yard signs, attended our rallies, and traveled numerous times to Richmond in order to voice opposition,” Mulston said.

Mulston added that SB982 followed the failed effort by Sen. Dave Marsden (D-Burke). “So, it is likely to resurrect itself in another piece of legislation in the future.”

During the 2024 General Assembly session, a Virginia Senate subcommittee voted to “continue” Marsden’s Senate Bill 675, so a more in-depth analysis of the potential casino could be conducted. In January 2023, Marsden introduced Senate Bill 1543, which would have amended state law to allow a casino to be built in any locality with a population of more than 1 million and operating under an urban county executive form of government. Marsden’s bill was withdrawn before the vote.

“We’re going to keep talking about it,” Surovell said after Wednesday’s vote.

‘Harsh Penalty’ Slams Senator

Boysko loses leadership positions after opposing Senate majority leader’s ‘casino bill.’

BY MERCIA HOBSON
THE CONNECTION

Virginia State Senator Jennifer Boysko (D-38) has been disciplined for speaking out against Senate Bill 982, Fairfax Casino bill. Boysko lost her positions as a budget conferee, chair of the Senate Transportation Committee, and member of the Rules Committee. Senate Majority Leader Scott A. Surovell (D-34) is the chief patron of Senate Bill 982.

“To lose those leadership positions was a harsh penalty. But I do not regret standing up for our community,” Boysko said in her online bulletin Friday evening, Feb. 14. “Thousands of people have worked together to defeat the casino legislation, and

WWW.CONNECTIONNEWSPAPERS.COM

I am proud to have led that effort. Sometimes, even members of the same party do not think as one. We must continue to work together to fight for our values.” Boysko testified against Surovell’s bill in a House subcommittee meant to pave the way for the casino gaming establishment.

SB982 died in a House Appropriations subcommittee on Wednesday, Feb. 12, “passed by for the day.” It would have authorized Fairfax County Board of Supervisors the right to call a referendum and for local voters to decide whether they wanted Fairfax County to be an eligible host locality for a casino establishment in Virginia. The bill slated a specific area in Tysons for the casino gaming establishment. Comstock Holding Cos. is pushing for the project development; however, the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors would, as the next step in following the process, issue a Request for Proposals and choose a plan before putting it to voters.

Boysko said, “I’ve heard from many friends far and near over the past few days.” Boysko added that she is “very proud” of her work in the positions from which she was removed and proud to have led the effort against the casino proposed for the Tyson’s area.

Sen. Stella Pekarsky (D-36), Sen. Lamont Bagby (D-14), and Sen. Todd Pillion (R-6) co-sponsored SB-982.

According to Boysko, there are rumors that a bill leading to a casino could be brought back. “I will continue to fight against all efforts to bring a casino to or near District 38. Please continue to let your legislators know how you feel,” she said in her bulletin.

“To lose those leadership positions was a harsh penalty. But I do not regret standing up for our community.”

— Sen. Jennifer B. Boysko (D-38)

Surovell released a statement on X on Feb. 12, as patron of SB982 for the Tysons Entertainment District passed by for the day in the House Appropriations Committee. “With the Trump administration moving aggressively to eliminate jobs in Northern Virginia,” Surovell said he was disappointed that the bill did not advance “to bring thousands of union jobs to Fairfax County.” With thousands of federal jobs already lost and more economic harm on the horizon, Surovell said he looked forward to continued work with his partners on the Fairfax Delegation to the General Assembly and local Board of Supervisors to bring forward supportive policies “that offer relief and support for our citizens.”

Sunday, Feb. 9, was the last day of the 2025 Chief vs. Chief Adoption Bowl held at the Fairfax County Animal Shelter Michael R. Frey Campus and Fairfax County Animal Shelter Lorton Campus. Chief Kevin Davis scored five adoptions; Chief Butler three. The shelters waived all adoption fees for dogs weighing 45 pounds or more from Thursday, February 6, through Sunday, February 9. Ultimately, what mattered wasn't which chief had the winning score but that eight dogs crossed the welcome mats to their new homes.

Stress Crisis: Need someone to talk to? Low-cost options.

BY MERCIA HOBSON
THE CONNECTION

Some local individuals support the new administration's actions. For others, ongoing shock and awe, compounded by feelings of powerlessness and uncertainty, are at an all-time high, leaving them chronically stressed.

Many factors contribute to stress, each impacting different sets of community members. For federal employees, it is the ongoing mass layoffs and firings at various federal agencies. The immigrant community fears deportation, family separations and an uncertain future. The LGBTQIA2S+ communities fear losing freedoms to express their identities. Black, Indigenous and other people of color face racism. Four U.S. aviation accidents have occurred since Inauguration Day — Jan. 29, Arlington, Va.; Jan. 31, Philadelphia; Feb. 6, Alaska; and Feb. 10, Arizona (plus Toronto Feb. 17) — raising concerns about flying for some, while at the same time, hundreds of FAA employees are fired despite the crashes. Most people can handle small doses of stress, but chronic stress risks individuals' health.

“A body under constant stress is like an engine that's continuously being revved,” the Cleveland Clinic reports. Low-cost mental health resources are available. For life-threatening and medical emergencies, call 911 or go to the nearest emergency room.

What happens to a body under stress? Stress caused by a perceived threat prompts the adrenal glands to release a surge of hormones; among them, adrenaline makes the heart beat faster, raises blood pressure, and releases cortisol. This changes immune system responses and suppresses the digestive, reproductive, and growth processes. The long-term activation of the stress response system and too much exposure to cortisol and other stress hormones can disrupt almost all the body's processes, according to the Mayo Clinic. Stress causes health problems such as anxiety, depression, headaches, muscle tension and pain; digestive issues, sleep problems, memory problems, eating challenges, as well as heart disease, heart attack, high blood pressure, and stroke.

tobacco and vape products from underage persons and would increase random inspections to prevent sales to minors. My office has worked with stakeholders from the Department of Taxation, the Alcoholic Beverage Control Authority, and representatives from convenience stores to come to a solution. Inspections are an important tool in deterring sales, but can end up costing as much as $174 per location between ABC agent overtime pay, youth working with law enforcement on these buys, and transportation costs.

Most Email

The bill I received the most email on this session was Senator Scott Surovell's (D-Fairfax) SB 982, which would have allowed the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors to hold a referendum regarding the proposed Tyson's Corner Casino. More than four hundred of my constituents emailed me sharing concerns with this piece of legislation.

I spoke against and voted against SB 982. It was not requested by Fairfax County's Board of Supervisors, and further, the licensing fee and tax revenue split was not favorable to the county. SB 982 also would not have allowed the county to conduct an independent assessment of where the most appropriate site for the casino and accompanying conference center, entertainment center, and hotel would be located.

Expanding Fair Elections with Ranked Choice Voting

As we continue working to improve our democracy, I am happy to support SB 1009, sponsored by Senator Saddam Salim (D-Fairfax), a bill that allows elections for any local governing body to be conducted by Ranked Choice Voting (RCV), ensuring that our electoral system more accurately reflects the will of the voters.

Ranked choice voting allows voters to rank candidates in order of preference, rather than being forced to choose just one. If no candidate secures a majority outright, the system eliminates the lowest-performing candidate, reallocating votes based on next-ranked preferences until a winner emerges. This ensures that the winning candidate has broad support and reduces the risk of "spoiler" candidates splitting the vote.

Supporting Affordable Housing

I was happy to support HB 2153 introduced by Delegate Betsy Carr (D-Richmond), a bill that empowers nonprofit organizations to expand access to affordable housing.

This bill would allow localities to waive certain zoning restrictions, reduce administrative fees, and expedite site plan approvals for nonprofit-led housing projects. By cutting through bureaucratic red tape, we are helping to create a pathway for trusted nonprofit organizations to provide quality, affordable housing for families in need. To ensure long-term affordability, the bill also requires that housing developed under these provisions remains affordable for at least 15 years.

By empowering nonprofits and local governments to work together, we can create real solutions to Virginia's housing crisis—ensuring that families and individuals have access to safe and stable housing for years to come.

Protecting Veterans from Exploitation

SB 1222 was introduced by Senator Bryce Reeves (R-Orange) and myself. Under this legislation, charges would be capped for veterans who use private application services in seeking to upgrade their VA benefits. The bill would also ensure transparency by requiring that veterans receive clear disclosures about their rights before agreeing to any services. This piece of legislation would have introduced new protections against fraud and financial exploitation targeting veterans by prohibiting the use of overseas call centers and solicitation of vets during the benefits application process.

This legislation was a bipartisan effort. Unfortunately the bill did not pass in the House Rules committee, which ended its consideration for this session. I look forward to continuing to work on these protections next year.

Prescription Drug Affordability

Finally, Delegate Karrie Delaney (D-Fairfax) has introduced HB 1724, which would establish the Prescription Drug Affordability Board to bring stakeholders together to lower the cost of prescription drugs here in the Commonwealth. This board would conduct a review of the affordability of these drugs and make recommendations to bring down costs by limiting drug payment amounts involving state regulated programs, and would require nonprofit organizations contracted by the Department of Health to provide more transparency on prescription drug pricing to the board. I cosponsored this bill in previous years. Virginians at large agree the cost of prescription drugs are too high.

Thanks for the continued opportunity to serve,

Adam P. Ebbin

Bamboo: Food for Some, Problem for Many

National Zoo pandas enjoying area's plants.

BY SUSAN LAUME
THE CONNECTION

If you were a famous Giant Panda celebrity, Bao Li or Qing Bao, newly in residence at the National Zoo, who would be your best friend in Fairfax County? That might be Patricia Greenberg, an ecologist and manager of the Park Authority's newly formed Invasive Plant Management Program. As such, she is the person who could be described as having the keys to the bamboo kingdom, in charge of bamboo management and control.

Just as everyone knows Winnie the Pooh loves hunny, everyone knows the favorite food of adorable black and white panda bears is bamboo. It makes up about 99 percent of what they eat. Bamboo is low in nutritional value, so pandas need to eat a lot of it. They spend 10-16 hours per day doing just that. According to the World Wildlife Fund, pandas also sometimes forage on farmland and eat eggs, small animals, pumpkin, kidney beans, domestic pig food, and herbs, vines, shrubs and trees in small amounts. But bamboo is their go-to meal. They can be expected to eat 26-84 pounds per day. That's a lot of bamboo. Being far removed from their native Southwest China mountain habitat, where in the Washington Metro area to find the fresh bamboo varieties they find tasty?

In Fairfax County, Greenberg's job centers on knowing where bamboo is growing on public lands. The new section she manages was created after the county enacted its bamboo ordinance, which went into effect on Jan. 1, 2023. With about 25,000 of the 31,000 county-owned acres, the Park Authority has a big responsibility when it comes to bamboo management. They estimate bamboo encompasses at least 250 known acres, at 190 sites here.

Greenberg's mission is to eliminate the fast growing, spreading plant from parkland; to comply with the bamboo ordinance. And, of course, to protect native trees and other plants which are out-competed by the invasive bamboo. Removal could take 15 years, at an estimated cost of $9.25 million. She is now engaged in mapping and prioritizing the patches for removal. She is ranking the sites to determine where to start the huge, multi-year effort. Patches are ranked on factors such as, accessibility, size of patch and plants; proximity to active homeowner treatment sites, or sensitive or rare resources, or other invasive management projects; and social-political factors. As patch evaluation efforts continue, contractors are beginning use of lethal methods to remove the plants at a handful of sites.

National Zoo Needs Fresh Bamboo

On the other side of the hate/love bamboo relationship, keepers at the Zoo are in need of a regular fresh bamboo source, and Fairfax County has a lot of the invasive plant material. As non-native plants, bamboo has a way of standing out against other plants in the landscape. Zoo employees noticed plants growing in a corner of Huntley Meadows Park, along the Dogue Creek in Alexandria. They sought, and were granted, a park use permit to harvest it. Cutting bamboo stalks from the approximately 1.5 acres, multiple times per week, helps to satisfy the appetites of their panda charges. Since other zoo animals enjoy the fibrous plant as well, the zoo's use permit, good through the end of 2025, may help to nourish other zoo residents as well.

Greenberg says, "It's a big help to us, getting the material removed from the site." Her thoughts are echoed by FCPA executive director, Jai Cole, who adds, "As an ecologist by trade, I'm very interested in sustainable solutions to achieve positive outcomes for our environment. I'm excited for the potential that this relationship could have for helping us dispose of unwanted bamboo and providing essential nutrition for the ever-popular pandas at the National Zoo."

A bamboo owner must contain the running bamboo to keep it from spreading onto any public right-of-way or adjoining property not owned by the bamboo owner.

If a bamboo owner fails to comply with a Notice of Violation, each day that running bamboo remains un-contained may result in a civil penalty of $50, up to a maximum of $2,000 in a 12-month period."

There are many species of bamboo, and growing conditions are a factor in considering optimal sites for harvesting bamboo as panda food. FCPA planning director, Torsha Bhattacharya, hopes the pandas like the taste of our Fairfax County bamboo, seeing an opportunity to scale up the partnership. She calls it, "a two-for: we eradicate the bamboo and it becomes food for the pandas."

Growing bamboo is not illegal in Fairfax County, but it must be controlled within an individual's property. That control has proved a growing problem for homeowners, HOAs and faith communities. For a summary on dealing with running bamboo, see

Penalties for Porch Pirates

Mail theft expected to rise to felony in Virginia.

BY SUSAN LAUME
THE CONNECTION

Have you gone to your porch to collect a package after receiving a virtual delivery notice, only to find the item nowhere in sight? The number of packages stolen after home delivery is now so common that the term "porch pirate," slang term for package theft, is well known to all.

With the rise and ease of e-commerce shopping, consumers also have made it easier for package thieves. Packages left outside at the delivery address provide easy access to anyone. Those with nefarious intent may target areas with high deliveries, or are even known to follow a delivery truck, reaching packages before the intended addressees. Front door surveillance cameras are in prevalent use as a deterrent. Rising thefts also are leading delivery services and customers to seek alternate delivery options, such as: package lockers, or using alternate addresses or setting delivery times when someone is available to receive the packages.

Del. Vivian Watts (D-14) and Sen. Saddam Salim (D-37) sponsored near identical bills in their respective legislative bodies in this session of the General Assembly in response to constituents' frustration with the growing problem. Watts was particularly concerned with rising check theft. She says,

"Mail theft has significantly increased with over half of altered checks being re-written for over $14,000. The bank account number and routing information also can be sold to syndicates who will use them in identity theft."

Mail theft, or receipt of stolen mail, is a serious crime under federal law. Depending upon the gravity of the crime, according to 18 U.S. Code § 1708, those found guilty of mail theft face the possibility of fines up to $250,000 and imprisonment for up to five years, or both. Watts shares that having a State law augments law enforcement powers. "Giving all law enforcement the power to go after this criminal activity will be much more effective than depending on a small

Decline in Federal Workers Will Hurt Real Estate

By Mercia Hobson
CONNECTION NEWSPAPERS

Reducing Fairfax County's and Virginia's federal workforce would further depress the declining commercial real estate market in Northern Virginia.

Fairfax County's decline in the commercial real estate market significantly impacts its revenue along with "rising employee compensation costs," reports Fairfax County Government News.

The county's 2026 Budget Forecast, published on Nov. 27, 2024, states, "Non-residential property values are expected to fall by 1.3 percent, marking two consecutive years of declines driven by high office vacancies and rising operational costs."

"Rising costs and limited revenue growth drive [a] projected $292.7 million shortfall," for Fairfax County.

According to the Fairfax County Economic Development Authority, businesses in Fairfax County receive $38 billion in federal contracts, accounting for 5 percent of all federal procurement contracts.

"Any reduction in federal presence in our county will cause a major impact on the commercial real estate market," Jeff McKay (D), chairman of the Fairfax County Board of Supervisors, said in his Nov. 2024 board matter, "Review of County Regulations Regarding Incoming Presidential Administration," referencing the commercial real estate market that was already expected to fall by 1.3 percent.

McKay added that they had to "prepare to address the potential impacts of the new administration" locally. McKay presented the board matter with James Walkinshaw (D-Braddock). "The President-Elect has re-committed to his goal of dismantl[ing] government bureaucracy, and among the many policy changes that he plans to make in service of this goal are several that could have a significant impact on our community. Those include "a proposed drastic reduction in the federal workforce and the replacement of non-partisan civil servants with those deemed 'loyal,'" McKay read.

The board matter directed staff to evaluate the potential impacts of the new president on local policies.

Is Help On The Way?

Thousands of federal employees and contractors fired or furloughed; more in the works.

By Mercia Hobson
THE CONNECTION

Fairfax County has more than 50,000 federal employees, according to the Fairfax County Economic Development Authority. Virginia's two U.S. Senators, Tim Kaine (D) and Mark Warner (D), represent residents in Fairfax County and the rest of the Commonwealth.

Fear and uncertainty threaded throughout the Fairfax County federal workforce after an unexpected email with the subject line "Fork in the Road" arrived in their employee email inboxes on Jan. 28, as it reportedly did nationwide for over 2 million federal employees. The offer was to keep their job, align with new reforms, work in the office, or type Resign in the subject line and hit send. Employees were offered eight months of pay and benefits while on leave if they did so.

Reading an open letter to federal workers that he shared on the Senate floor on Tuesday, Feb. 4, Kaine told the federal employees that he understood things are tough.

"The Trump Administration has made plain that it wants to kick you around — by blocking your ability to administer federal resources, censoring your free speech, locking you out of your work buildings," Kaine said.

He cautioned, "Donald Trump has no authority to offer you a resignation buy-out. Don't trust a guy with a long history of stiffing contractors by taking him up on a sham deal he won't follow through on." The full text of the letter is available at <https://www.kaine.senate.gov/press-releases/video-kaine-issues-open-letter-to-federal-workers-urging-strength-promising-support>.

The Pew Research Center reports that the average annual pay across the federal workforce is $106,382. Half of all federal workers reportedly make between $50,000 and $109,999 annually.

What federal workers earn

Warner said on Facebook that "people are starting to understand what's at stake."

"More people are standing up and speaking out. I hope that will ultimately creep into some of my Republican friends . . . We're in the fight, and at the end of the day, we're going to come out okay," Warner said.

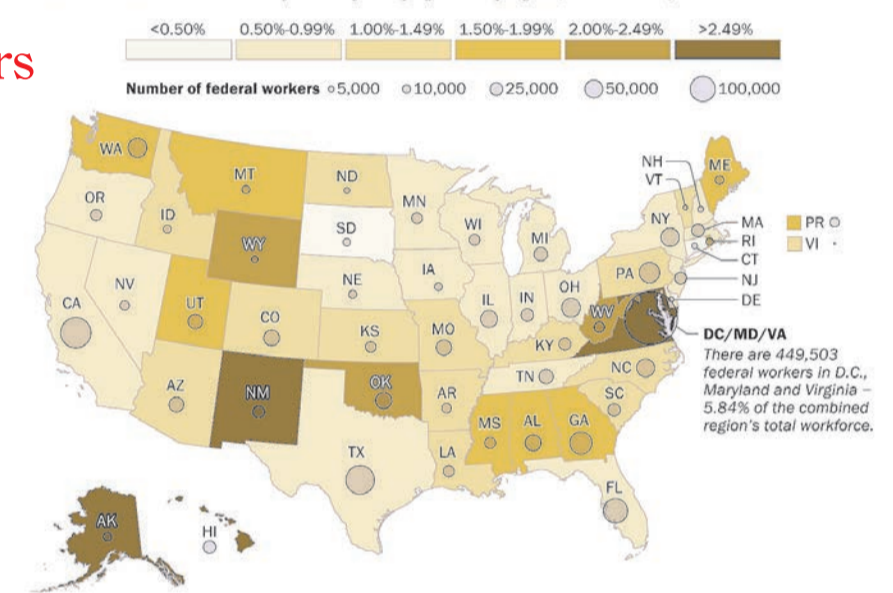

On Thursday, Feb. 6, U.S. District Judge George O'Toole Jr. temporarily suspended the Office of Personnel Management's federal worker buyout offer deadline. Federal workers had until Monday, Feb. 10, at 11:59 p.m. to decide whether to resign with pay through the end of September, OPM said in a social media post.

The National Active and Retired Federal Employees Association (NARFE) reports, "Though the executive order issued recently claims to prevent politically motivated dismissals, without strong protections in place, these assurances remain empty. The lack of enforceable safeguards leaves federal employees vulnerable to politically motivated actions that could threaten their careers and the effectiveness of our government."

NARFE instructs people to contact their legislators and urge them to support the Saving the Civil Service Act, H.R. 492/S.134. "This important legislation would block the return of Schedule E, safeguarding the merit-based principles that have long been the foundation of a professional, nonpartisan federal workforce," NARFE says.

Federal civilian workers as % of all nonfarm payroll employees, March 2024

Note: For security reasons, OPM masks location information for employees of the FBI, DEA, BATF, Secret Service and Mint. Employees of those agencies who work in the Washington, D.C., metropolitan area are all reported as working in D.C. Location information is suppressed in the personnel database for employees of those agencies who work elsewhere — nearly 270,000 all told. In addition to the totals above, 3,215 federal employees work in Guam; 642 in other U.S. territories; and 30,811 in foreign countries. Work location for 6,524 federal employees is listed as "unspecified."

number of federal law enforcement officers. In addition, since "mail theft" under federal law has always included stealing packages, this new state law also applies to stealing any package delivered your home or left for you in the apartment lobby. This includes any on-line orders or direct deliveries from retailers."

Both bills passed with near unanimous bipartisan support in their respective bodies. They can be expected to go to the governor's desk for signature after being combined into a single bill, and passed by the full General Assembly later this month. The bill language would add a new section to Virginia Code §18.2-110.1 to create the category of "mail theft" to the list of State crimes. Mail is defined in the section in its broadest terms. Theft of mail would include "any letter, postal card, parcel, package, bag or other material along with its contents." That means that check theft, as mail content, is covered.

The Code makes fraudulent interference with mail a State Class 6 felony. Mail theft would join a host of other named crimes in the Code at various levels of penalties, from Class 1 to 4 misdemeanors, and Class 1 to 6 felonies. The highest level of seriousness being Class 1, and the lowest Class 4 or 6. Examples of listed crimes in Virginia include: unauthorized use of dairy milk cases or crates — a Class 4 misdemeanor; removing a shopping cart from store premises — a Class 3 misdemeanor; altering a price tag on a product to defraud the seller — either petit or grand larceny, depending upon the article's value. Mail theft would be on a par with receipt of a stolen firearm — a Class 6 felony; participation in an organized retail theft ring is a Class 3 felony.

PLANT A TREE

The McLean Trees Foundation, Neighborhood Trees Program, wants to help you plant a native tree in your yard. Don't know how to plant a tree but want to support the environmental health of your community? Want your family to have the experience of planting a tree? If you live in McLean, Virginia, the McLean Trees Foundation (MTF) (a local nonprofit) will help you select an appropriate native tree for your property, deliver the tree to your yard, help you plant it, provide information on maintenance, and even check back with you a few months after planting to see how your tree is doing. If you are interested in participating in this terrific program to boost our native tree canopy in McLean, please visit our website at <https://www.mcleantreesfoundation.org/neighborhood-tree-program> and submit your application! A modest fee of $100 is assessed to cover the costs of the program (limit one 6-7 foot tree in 15 gallon container per household). We have a separate program for those who are interested in spearheading a community tree planting campaign in their neighborhood. MTF's Tree Champion program makes it easy to help your neighbors plant more trees! For more information, visit the website at <https://www.mcleantreesfoundation.org/tree-champions-program>.

FEB. 4 TO MARCH 2

Exhibition: The Creative Quest: Three Generations of Intuitive Painting. At Reston Community Center's Jo Ann Rose Gallery, 1609-A Washington Plaza North Reston. Featuring 30 works by intuitive painter Judith Forst and many of her students, and their students. Inspired by the teachings of Michele Cassou who founded the Painting Experience in San Francisco, CA, Reston resident Judith Forst transformed her traditional painting practice from an academic based approach to one focused on painting without inhibition. Focusing on the process rather than a product or desired result led to a freedom of expression and the discovery of a compelling authentic voice. Ms. Forst began sharing this technique in her home studio in 2001, and dozens of local artists have been exposed to this innovative practice. A selection of Judith's paintings will be featured along with works by 17 other intuitive painters.

bly would have still been able to tread water and keep up with everything, had it not been for inflation. And I worried that my Fairfax customers wouldn't come if I raised my prices. So I fell behind on my payments to University Mall's property-management company, Van Metre."

A husband and father of three young children, Waskiewicz, 43, said he exhausted his personal savings, opening the Fairfax store and starting the Tysons venture. "My seven ice-cream/frozen yogurt machines cost $60,000 alone," he said. "I never repaid myself, but I kept paying my employees and vendors."

However, when the Fairfax location began, he had a primary job selling cars. But in September 2024, said Waskiewicz, "I went full in on this yogurt business and quit my other job. I worked seven days/week, 65 hours/week. And when business was slow in the winter, I paid myself just $200/week."

Still, with expenses rising and a monthly rent of $4,600, by this January, he owed Van Metre $40,000. "We were in year four of a 10-year lease, and I wanted mall management to extend our loan repayment for 90 days," explained Waskiewicz. "That would get us to spring and warmer weather, when we'd have more customers and make more sales."

Instead, on Jan. 15, the Fairfax County Sheriff's Office – acting on Van Metre's behalf – placed an eviction notice on Peachwave's front door. "It said we had to leave by 7 a.m., Jan. 23, and clear everything out of here," said Waskiewicz. "And they only gave me eight days' notice – over a holiday weekend [Martin Luther King Day], a presidential inauguration, snow and bitter cold."

Besides, if he'd had more notice, removing everything from the business without professional help would have been a Herculean task. Each machine weighs 500 pounds, and the store also contains a large counter, tables, chairs and three commercial refrigerators.

"I have a total of 3 tons of heavy equipment that you can't put in a pickup truck," said Waskiewicz. "I called several moving companies, and the only one that even replied to me said it couldn't do it until the end of February, at the earliest."

On Jan. 21, the last day Peachwave was open for business, Waskiewicz said Van Metre was "threatening to keep my $180,000 worth of equipment if it's not removed by the 23rd. I want to stay; but if not, I at least need time to properly vacate. And if I don't do it on my own by then, the sheriff would forcibly remove me and not allow me back to get anything."

Since receiving the eviction notice, he said he'd phoned and emailed Van Metre some 20 times, but "They've not responded to me, at all. I want to ask them why can't we still work together, and what's the rush? Why are they trying to put me out of here on a rocket?"

"My daughter, who's almost 7, often comes to work with me. And when I told her this store might go away for good, she started to cry. If I can save the equipment, we could potentially reopen in a new location. But if not, I wouldn't have the spirit – or the money – to do it all again from scratch."

On Jan. 27, in response to some questions from The Connection, Ty Hausch, Van Metre's vice president of commercial leasing, said, "While an eviction is certainly a difficult decision for any landlord to make, this process has been going on for many months and the tenant has been notified of each step throughout the process."

"Unfortunately, the tenant made no effort at all to communicate with us until the Sheriff's Department notified the tenant of the eviction based on the order issued by Fairfax County [General] District Court. We are cooperating with the tenant to retrieve their equipment and personal property. It is an unfortunate situation, and we wish the tenant well in their future endeavors."

Waskiewicz, however, disputed what Hausch said. Waskiewicz said Van Metre took him to court last year, after he fell behind on his rent. He was then placed in a payment plan to pay off what he owed, and he was still in the process of doing that when he was ordered to leave. According to Waskiewicz, Van Metre doesn't believe that he never got an eviction notice until Jan. 15.

"They served my registered agent in Virginia Beach but never sent the notices to the store," he explained. "I even have the full $40,000 owed and offered it, but they won't respond to me about paying it to be allowed to stay." Still, he had no answer for why his agent wouldn't have forwarded the previous eviction notices to him.

Meanwhile, Hausch said, "We are willing to allow a reasonable amount of time for equipment and personal property to be removed. [Waskiewicz's] equipment is financed or leased, and we are already working with his lender and lessee to schedule equipment removal. We are legally required, pursuant to signed agreements, to allow his lender and lessee to remove their equipment first."

As of Feb. 14, the store remained closed, with all the equipment still inside. "The mall management never had any intention of letting us stay, it seems," said Waskiewicz. "[But] thank you very much to the wonderful community that did try to help us. We truly appreciate you."

affordable, which is good – especially near a high school. It's sad that it's closing; it's such a vital piece of University Mall."

"I've had a lot of good memories here," added LaFountain. "My friends and I came here before homecoming, and we were sitting here laughing."

Noting how beloved Peachwave has become among its customers, Osborne said, "We work downstairs [on the outdoor mall's lower level] at the Cat Café. It's like a foster home for cats. And last Saturday, our boss gave me and all the other volunteers there her credit card to come here, buy yogurt and support them."

Also enjoying some Peachwave frozen yogurt were Robinson juniors Henry Stockard, Anne Sonner and Alexandra Alexson. Stockard selected vanilla flavor and topped it with fruit, hot fudge and Gummy Bears. And Sonner adorned her chocolate and Oreo yogurts with mini chocolate chips, Reese's Bites and a brownie. Alexson chose the same yogurt flavors as Sonner, topping it with the same treats as Stockard and adding M&Ms.

"We've come here every year on the last day of school, as our tradition," said Sonner. "Plus, we're here at other times during the year."

"It's a friendly environment," said Stockard. "The owner's always welcoming and the yogurt's good."

Agreeing, Alexson said, "I come here every time I come to the mall, and the yogurt always tastes delicious."

An adult customer, Deirdre Daumit, said she's been a regular at Peachwave. "My daughter, who's 11, loves all the choices of frozen yogurt, particularly the pineapple and the tart, fruity flavors," she said. "She also likes the toppings that many of the other yogurt places don't offer. And I have a particular fondness for their Fruity Pebbles shake."

She also liked how Waskiewicz "worked with local schools on their Spirit Nights, helping us raise money. I always appreciate businesses doing that."

Regarding the store's eviction, Daumit said, "As a customer, this store is a big thing in our lives." She continued, "I truly enjoy the different establishments in this mall. I come to Peachwave as a destination – not for the anchor stores. Now I'm going to have to learn how to make my own Fruity Pebbles shake at home."

As for Waskiewicz, he thanked the community for all its support. "My family and I live in Fairfax and have enjoyed having our business here," he said. "Seeing all the smiles on the kids' faces as they came here and were excited about their frozen yogurt made my wife and I happy, too. We were selling happiness in a cup."

It's All Relative

By KENNETH B. LOURIE

As you regular readers may have gleaned from reading this column over the years, I had great parents and was raised in a wonderful and nurturing environment which enabled my brother, Richard, and I to go on and live productive lives. However, there was one element missing from our upbringing (more so for me since I was five years younger than my brother): grandparents. Oh, they were there all right (except for my maternal grandmother who had died a few months after I was born), but only during my childhood, not my adolescence and certainly not my adulthood as they all had died long before. As a result, I have fleeting memories of my two grandfathers (Hyman and Jacob) and one grandmother (Bessie), most of which involve visits to nursing homes.

However, when I married into my wife Dina's family, not only did I gain in-laws, I also inherited – for lack of a better word, Dina's two grandmothers (Frances and Filomena) and one grandfather (Cesare). All with whom I would develop adult relationships which would last over 25 years – and only occasional visits to nursing homes, an experience much different than I had with my own grandparents. It wasn't so much a revelation as it was an enriching and rewarding opportunity. An opportunity I feel extremely fortunate to have had. It makes me smile – and remember, to this day.

Juxtaposed against this history and combined with my own cancer diagnosis – which originally was a "13 month to two years" prognosis, I share the following story/acceptance of reality from Dina's Italian grandfather "Chez." The 'acceptance of reality' to which I refer is death. A very common thought/pre-occupation if you're diagnosed with "terminal" cancer or are an individual of a certain advanced age. And the type of conversation that I never had with my own grandparents as I was too young, and they were too old (if you know what I mean). Yet one I occasionally had with Dina's grandparents.

As per usual, it was a holiday, so Dina and I were visiting West Chester, Pa. where "all the relations" lived, and we were staying overnight with her grandparents – also as usual. "Chez" all I were talking about cars for some reason. Dina's grandparents owned one car, an Olsmobile Omega, a four-door sedan. Chez got to talking about all the cars he had owned, and he remembered back an impressive number of years/cars. And within this car context, "Chez" says that the Omega is the last car he'll ever own. He'll rarely drive the car anyway. Usually, I drove it when we visited. But his admission, at least to me, was a tacit acceptance of his own inevitable death (he was already into his late 80s at this juncture but still living at home). However, it was said with humor and sincerity if that's even the word. No regrets, no complaints, no why or woe is me. Just understanding that, to quote Forrest Gump's mother (Sally Field) "Death is just a part of living."

I am sharing this anecdote with you because recently I've been thinking an identical thought to myself lately. I've been saying that the 2019 Audi Q3 that I'm driving and still paying monthly for, ultimately will be the last car that I own/buy. Since I've been saying it to myself, I'm not sure I've been saying it with the same humor as "Chez" had said all those years ago. I sure hope so. If so, it's an attitude I learned from him. And one I'm proud to have learned.
